found the mucous membrane protruding out from the anus. He also noticed that there was a perforation of the rectum. The Civil Surgeon Rai Bahadur Doctor Ram Chand (P. W. No. 3), who conducted the post mortem examination stated that on internal examination he found the rectum perforated about 4" above the anus and that there was slight congestion in some of the intestines. In his opinion death was due to shock and septic absorption on account of perforation of the rectum. Mr. Puri has argued that the injuries caused by the insertion of the wooden instrument were not so serious and that the perforation was really caused by Sub Assistant Surgeon, Des Raj (P. W. No. 1), who was the first to examine the deceased and who is proved by clear and unimpeachable evidence to have had a long-standing enmity with the appellant. This enmity is no doubt established and as pointed out by the Sessions Judge, Des Raj gave his evidence at the trial in a most unsatisfactory manner but there is no warrant on the record for the suggestion that it was Des Raj, who had handled the deceased in such a manner as to cause the perforation, either intentionally or otherwise. After careful consideration of the evidence on the record and arguments of Counsel I have no hesitation in holding that it was the appellant who had inflicted the injury in the rectum of Nura. On the above findings there can be no doubt that the offence falls under s. 304-II and not under s. 325 as was urged by Mr. Puri in a faint-hearted manner.

As to the sentence there is no doubt that ordinarily an offence of this kind committed by a person in authority like the appellant on a prisoner who was in his charge cannot be lightly dealt with and a very substantial sentence should be imposed. But as pointed out above the circumstances of the present case are very peculiar. The appellant appears to have been a strict disciplinarian, who, in the discharge of his official duties, had to enforce the rules against the deceased and get him punished. The deceased was a person of desperate and violent character and was on the lookout for an opportunity to have his revenge against the appellant. On the day of the occurrence Nura had his chance. He stealthily concealed himself along the wall and as soon as the appellant came near the place he suddenly sprang on him and gave him a shock-beating on the face, in the presence of his subordinates and a large number of convicts, causing injuries on the forehead and the bridge of the nose vide evidence of Khan Sahib Dr. Haji Munir ud-Din, Assistant Surgeon (P. W. No. 7) The appellant lost self-control and in the heat of the moment committed the crime. Having regard to these circumstances, and bearing in mind the fact that the appellant is described by his officers as a person "whose treatment towards the convicts and other people in Jail was unexceptional" (see page 63 of the record) I do not think that the sentence imposed on him by the learned Sessions Judge is so manifestly inadequate as to justify interference on the revision side. The principles which this Court should follow in this matter are well settled. He laid down by Sir Meredyth Plowden in Empress v. Chuni Lal (1) "The principles upon which the Chief Court habitually acts as a court of revision in relation to the enhancement of sentences, where the law allows a discretion to the court whose sentence is impugned, are that it should not interfere if the sentence passed involves substantial punishment, and should interfere if the sentence is manifestly inadequate. The Court is, in particular, slow to interfere where interference would involve the imprisonment of persons already discharged from Jail, though this circumstance is no insuperable obstacle. The Court also frequently declines to interfere in order to enhance a sentence on the mere ground that it would itself have passed a heavier sentence contenting itself with pointing out that the sentence is so far light that a heavier sentence would have been maintained."

See also the judgment of Broadway, J. in Crown v. Budha (2). In my opinion the circumstances of this case do not warrant a departure from the rule laid down above.

For the foregoing reasons I dismiss the appeal of Bhola Nath and affirm his conviction under s. 104 II and the sentence of rigorous imprisonment for one year imposed on him. I also dismiss the petition for revision filed by the Local Government for enhancement of the sentence.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, rr. 4, 5—Mortgage suit—Adjustment after preliminary decree—Power to pass final decree—Proceedings for decree absolute, whether execution proceedings—O. XXI, r. 2, applicability of.

Proceedings to get a decree absolute for sale are not proceedings by way of execution of the preliminary decree but are proceedings in the suit to obtain a final decree for sale which is the only decree capable of execution. Order II, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code which provides for certifying a payment made out of Court is not, therefore, applicable to proceedings for a final decree and if money is not paid in the manner directed by the preliminary decree the Court is bound to pass a final decree for sale, notwithstanding an adjustment out of Court. Banarsi Das v. Nathu Mal (2), followed. [p. 733, col. 1.]

First Appeal from the final decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Amritsar, dated the 27th April, 1928.

Messrs. Faqir Chand and Chandra Gupta, for the Appellant.

Messrs M. L. Puri and Bal Kishen Mehra, for the Respondents.

Judgment—On the 19th July, 1927, the Subordinate Judge made a [preliminary decree under O. XXXIV, r. 4. Civil Procedure Code by which the mortgagor was directed to pay into Court Rs. 11,136 with interest specified therein on, or before, the 19th January, 1928. This direction was not complied with by the mortgagor, with the result that, on the 27th April, 1928, the Court passed a final decree for sale.

The final decree is impeached on two grounds. In the first place, it is urged that as a mortgagor had preferred an appeal from the preliminary decree to the High Court which appeal was dismissed in limine on the 6th January, 1928, the period of six months should be counted from that date, and not from the date of the preliminary decree passed by the trial Court. It is to be observed that the decision of the High Court dismissing the appeal in limine was not embodied in a decree, nor did it grant any extension of time for the payment of the money. It is, however, unnecessary to discuss the question whether the date of the preliminary decree or the date of the judgment of the High Court should be regarded as the terminus a quo because the language of the former makes it clear that no period was expressly fixed for the purpose of payment, but that a definite date, namely, the 19th January 1928, was specified on, or before, which the money was to be paid. It is admitted that no payment was made into court by the aforesaid date.

The second ground of attack proceeds upon the allegation that, on the 15th January, 1928, Musammat Durga Devi, the wife of the mortgagor Atma Ram, who had transferred the mortgaged property to her, had paid Rs. 11,136 to the decree-holders. It is argued that, in view of this payment which is alleged by one party to have been made out of Court but denied by the other, the trial Judge should not have passed the final decree. Now, it has been repeatedly held that the proceedings to get a decree absolute for sale are not proceedings by way of execution of the preliminary decree but are proceedings in the suit to obtain a final decree for sale which would be the only decree capable of execution vide, inter alia Sital Singh v Baij Nath Prasad (1). There can, therefore be no doubt that O. XXI, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code, which provides for certifying payment made out of court and is confined in its operation to execution proceedings, cannot be invoked by the appellant. Nor can she ask the court to recognise the alleged payment as an adjustment, compromise or satisfaction under O. XXIII, r. 3, Civil Procedure Code. It must be remembered that the preliminary decree expressly directs the defendant to make payment "into court" and O. XXXIV, r. 5, Civil Procedure Code, provides that if payment has not been made "into court" of all the amounts due from the defendant under the preliminary decree, the court shall pass a final decree for sale. It has been held by a Division Bench of the Chief Court of the Punjab in Banarsi Das v. Nathu Mal (2), that where the money is not paid in the manner directed by the preliminary decree, the court, is bound to pass a final decree for sale, and can recognise no settlement except by payment into court.

The language of the preliminary decree made in this case, as well as the general law enacted by O. XXXIV, r. 5, Civil Procedure Code, supports the decision of the trial Judge, and there is no ground for dissenting from his conclusion. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Miscellaneous First Civil Appeal from an order of the District Judge, Attock at Campbellpur, dated the 27th November, 1930.

Mr. M. L. Puri, for the Appellants.

Mr. Bishen Nath, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—An application was made by one of the creditors of a firm, which was doing business at Peshawar under the name of Uttam Chand Gobind Sahai, that Wadhu Shah son of Uttam Chand and Gobind Sahai, who were partners of the firm, may be declared insolvent, as they had left their usual place of business at Peshawar and had stopped their business. The other condition precedent for an application for insolvency that the debts of the debtors amounted to more than Rs. 500 was also alleged and has been proved. In the course of the proceedings Wadhu Shah died. It was urged by Counsel that being dead, the application could not proceed. The learned District Judge, however, overruled this objection. Following the decision of the Madras High Court in Vankatarama Aiyar v. Official Receiver, Tinnevely (1) he allowed the application to proceed and ordered the names of the sons of Wadhu Shah to be brought on the record, for realization and distribution of the property of the debtor. The proceedings were concluded by an order dated the 27th November, 1930, which held that an act of insolvency was proved, as Wadhu Shah and Gobind Sahai had given up their business at Peshawar and had absented themselves from that place. He declared both of them insolvents and ordered their property to vest in the Official Receiver. He also ordered that the creditor should prove his debt within three months and the application for discharge should be made within two years of the date of this order. The sons of Wadhu Shah have appealed against the order through Mr. Mukand Lal Puri.

The learned Counsel started his arguments with a point not raised by him in his grounds of appeal. He urged that there was no proof that the insolvents had departed from their usual place of business, with intent to defeat or delay their creditors and asked for permission under O. XLI, r. 2, to argue this new point. This was objected to by Mr. Bishen Nath, on behalf of the respondent. He pointed out that this contention had not been raised by the insolvents in the court below and it would be unfair to allow them to spring such a surprise on their opponent. This objection is reasonable and consequently I did not allow Mr. Puri to raise a contention at this stage, which had not been raised in the court below.

Coming to the grounds of appeal already filed by Mr. Puri, his principal ground was that Wadhu Shah could not legally be adjudged insolvent after his death. In other words, he wanted to contest the correctness of the decision in Venkatarama Aiyar v. Official Receiver, Tinnevely (1). He concedes, however, that since he filed his appeal, he has seen two other rulings in which the same view has been expressed. One is Ramathai Anni v. Kanniappa Mudaliar (2) and the other is Ramesh Chandra Seal v. Charu Chandra Mohuri (3). In this last decision a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court has followed the ruling reported as Venkatarama Aiyar v. Official Receiver, Tinnevely (1). Under the circumstances he admits that he cannot press the ground of appeal No. 1. I agree with the view taken in the rulings referred to above and hold that Wadhu Shah has been rightly declared insolvent in spite of the fact that he died before the application for his being declared insolvent was decided.

GHULAM NABI—CONVICT—

RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 335—Offence under provocation—Sentence of fine only—Insufficiency of.

An offence under s. 335, Penal Code, though committed under some provocation, should not be treated leniently and a sentence of fine only will not be sufficient to meet the ends of justice.

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Attock at Campbellpur, with his No. 1919-J. dated the 16th September, 1931.

Messrs. M. L. Batra, for the Government Advocate, and Jalal Din, for the Complainant-Petitioner.

Mr. Barkat Ali, for the Respondent.

Order.—The accused, Ghulam Nabi, has been convicted under s. 335 of the Indian Penal Code of completely severing with a razor one ear of his wife, Musammatt Anaran, and cutting off a portion of the other under the influence of grave and sudden provocation. He has been sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 1,000 without any sentence of imprisonment in default.

An appeal was presented from the conviction and sentence to the learned Sessions Judge who by an oversight has written no final order accepting or dismissing the appeal but has referred the case to this Court with a recommendation that the sentence should be enhanced.

There is no dispute as to the facts and, although the case is now treated as an appeal before me, Counsel for the accused has not challenged the correctness of the finding which he could not really do as the accused pleaded guilty and in his statement gave his version of what led him to behave as he did and this version has been accepted. Counsel for the appellant merely urges that the sentence is very adequate and refers me to some authorities to the effect that the powers of enhancement should not be lightly exercised. He also relies upon the fact that the wife of the accused, whom he mutilated in this way was found to have committed adultery later when in hospital with one Jahangir who has been duly convicted. He is unable to explain what bearing this has upon this case. Counsel for the Crown accepts the statement made by the accused as true and contends that it does not disclose such a degree of provocation as would justify the very lenient view taken by the Magistrate, though he is precluded from arguing that the facts establish an offence under a more serious section. I think this is true and, granting that the accused believed that his wife had been unfaithful and granting that she taunted him and said that she would not live with him and she preferred another man, the fact remains that to take a razor deliberately and mutilate her in the way this man did, constitutes as aggravated a case as could well occur under this section. The girl was sixteen years of age, the man twenty five. I am precluded from finding that a more serious offence has been committed. I am also precluded from passing a sentence more severe than the Magistrate, who tried the case, could have passed.

I first dismiss the appeal acting under s. 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code and pass the order which should have been passed by the Sessions Judge. Under the same section I enhance the sentence to two years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 100. The fine, if realised, to be paid to Musammam Anaran. In default of payment of fine the accused to undergo a further sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment.

Appeal against order for disposal of stolen property
—Notice to opposite side, whether necessary.

In an appeal against the order of a Magistrate for disposal of property regarding which an offence is committed, the Appellate Court should not reverse the order, without issuing notice to the party in whose favour the Magistrate has passed orders.

Petition for revision of an order of the Sessions Judge, Karnal, dated the 20th July 1931.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Petitioner.

Judgment.—A theft was committed from the house of Lala Janki Das at the end of August 1930 and a considerable amount of jewellery and cash was stolen. Two men, Jage and Kanhya, were sent up for trial and both were convicted. On appeal the conviction of Jage was upheld and Kanhya was acquitted.

The Magistrate who decided the case came to the conclusion that certain money which had been recovered in the course of investigation was the property of Lala Janki Das and he passed an order accordingly that this money was to be restored to him. The two persons, from whose possession this property had been recovered, Lehri and Bhagta, presented an appeal to the Sessions Judge who decided ex parte, without serving or hearing Lala Janki Das, that it was not proved that the money in question formed part of the proceeds of the stolen property and ordered that it should be restored to these two appellants.

A revision has now been presented by Lala Janki Das and admitted in this court. The Sessions Judge has held that the evidence of two men, Bakhtawar Singh and Tasadduq Hussain, as to what Lehri and Bhagta stated to the Police during the course of the enquiry was inadmissible under s. 162. Granting that this is so, the statement of the accused Jage, or such portion as led to the discovery of this money, was admissible. It appears to me that on the salient facts of the case there can be no shadow of doubt that the money produced by these two men formed part of the proceeds of the theft. The order should not have been passed by the Sessions Judge without serving or hearing the other sides as it is clearly an order to the prejudice of complainant.

I accept the revision, set aside the order passed by the Sessions Judge and restore the order passed by the Magistrate.

Petition for Revision of an order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, exercising special appellate powers, Lahore, dated the 14th February, 1931, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Third Class, Kasur, dated the 24th November, 1930.

Diwan Mehr Chand, for the Petitioner.

Judgment.—On the 22nd May, 1930, a plot of land belonging to the judgment debtor, Kanshi Ram, was sold in execution of a decree obtained against him by one Jhamgi Ram. On the 19th June, 1930, the judgment-debtor made an application under O. XXI, r. 89 of the Civil Procedure Code, stating that he had satisfied the claim of the decree-holder out of Court, and prayed that the sale should be set aside. It is to be observed that this application was not accompanied by a deposit of a sum equal to five per cent. of the purchase-money for payment to the auction-purchaser. The trial Judge, however, granted the application on the ground that the decree, which had been satisfied, had ceased to exist and the sale could not, therefore be confirmed. In support of his decision the learned Judge relied upon a judgment of the court of the Judicial Commissioner, Nagpur, in Maroti v. Vithoba (1).

The auction-purchaser preferred an appeal against the order of the trial court, and his appeal has been dismissed. It is conceded that the judgment relied upon by the trial court has been overruled by a Full Bench of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Nagpur, in Shankar v. Jawahir Lal (2). All doubt on the subject has been set at rest by the pronouncement made by their Lordships of the Privy Coun-oil in Nanhelal v. Umrao Singh (3), where their Lordships make the following pertinent observations:—

"In the first place, O. XXI, r. 2, which provides for certification of an adjustment come to out of court, clearly contemplates a stage in the execution proceedings when the matter lies only between the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder, and when no other interests have come into being. When once a sale has been effected a third party's interest intervenes, and there is nothing in this rule to suggest that it is to be disregarded. The only means by which the judgment-debtor can get rid of a sale, which has been duly carried out, are those embodied in r. 89, viz., by depositing in court the amount for the recovery of which the property was sold, together with five per cent. on the purchase-money which goes to the purchaser as statutory compensation, and this remedy can only be pursued within thirty days of the sale."

The law, as enunciated by the Privy Council, leaves no doubt that the settlement between the decree-holder and the judgment debtor cannot have the effect of extinguishing the right of the auction-purchaser. As regards the application made under r. 89, it is common ground that the judgment-debtor did not deposit in court for payment to the purchaser a sum equal to five per cent. of the purchase money and the sale could not, therefore, be set aside under that rule. Nor can the court invoke s. 151 in respect of a matter for which there is an express provision in the Code. It is incontrovertible that inherent jurisdiction conferred by that section must be exercised subject to the rule that if the Code does not contain specific provision which would meet the necessities of the case in question, such provisions should be followed and the inherent power should not be invoked. A court cannot make use of the special provisions of this section, where the applicant has his remedy provided elsewhere in the Code and has neglected to avail himself of it or has not complied with the conditions laid down by the Code.

For the aforesaid reasons I hold that the sale cannot be set aside either on account of the settlement between the parties to the decree, or under O. XXI, r. 89 of the Civil Procedure Code. I accordingly accept the application and, setting aside the orders of the court below, remit the case to the trial Judge for decision in accordance with law. The respondent must pay the costs incurred by the applicant in this court.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

Appeal from the Rangoon High Court.

March 3, 1932.

LORD BLANESBURGH, LORD TOMLIN AND SIR GEORGE LOWNDES.THE OFFICIAL LIQUIDATOR OF
M. E. MOOLLA SONS, LIMITED

—APPELLANTS

MRS. PERRIN R. BURJORJEE

—RESPONDENT.

Practice—New points in appeal—Question of law—Point of non-registration of admitted document, whether can be raised for the first time in appeal—Conduct of parties, effect of—Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 49—Unregistered agreement—Admissibility in suit for damages for breach of contract.

When a question of law is raised for the first time in a court of last resort upon the construction of a document or upon facts either admitted or proved beyond controversy, it is not only competent but expedient in the interests of justice to entertain the plea. The expediency of adopting that course may be doubted when the plea cannot be disposed of without deciding nice questions of fact in considering which the Court of ultimate review is placed in a much less advantageous position than the courts below. The course ought not in any case to be followed unless the court is satisfied that the evidence upon which they are asked to decide, establishes beyond doubt that the facts if fully investigated would have supported the new plea. Connecticut Fire Insurance Company v. Kavanagh (1), relied on. [p. 741, col. 2.]

There is nothing in s. 49 of the Registration Act when properly construed to compel the court to take notice of the non-registration of an admitted document unless at any rate such document must, if treated as effective, be the foundation of a judgment affecting immoveable property comprised in such document. [ibid.]

[As the parties were not agreed on the facts and there were indications of a course of conduct on the part of the appellant which was sufficient to preclude him from raising the new point their Lordships refused to allow the appellant to raise the point of non-registration for the first time before the Board.]

Where the claim is a personal one for damages of an admitted contract, the Court of Appeal is not bound to take notice of the fact of the non-registration of the deed of agreement as the proceedings do not in any way affect any immoveable property. [p. 741, col. 2.]

Messrs. W. H. Upjohn, K. C. and T. B. W. Ramsay, for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and Pennell, for the Respondent.

Lord Tomlin—This appeal is concerned with the question whether a creditor's proof lodged by the respondent in the liquidation of the company whose liquidator is the appellant and rejected by the liquidator was properly so rejected.

On the 23rd December, 1929, the trial Judge on the Original Side of the High Court of Judicature at Rangoon held that the proof was rightly rejected. On the 4th August, 1930, this decision was reversed on appeal to the appellate side of the court.

The proof in question was for Rs. 63,219-15-0, damages alleged to have been incurred by the respondent by reason of the failure of the company to complete the purchase of property agreed to be sold by the respondent by an agreement dated the 27th July, 1921.

The only question in issue or debated at the hearing before the trial Judge, or on the appeal, was whether the agreement for sale (on the face of which the purchaser was one M. E. Moolla) had been entered into by Moolla on his own account or whether the company was the undisclosed principal of Moolla in respect of such agreement.

The trial Judge held that Moolla had entered into the agreement as principal and had afterwards transferred the benefit of it to the company and that, therefore, the company was under no liability to the respondent.

The Appellate Court held that the company was the undisclosed principal and was liable to the respondent and that the proof had been wrongly rejected.

Against this decision the liquidator appealed to His Majesty in Council and before their Lordships' Board raised the contention that the agreement of the 27th July, 1921, required registration under the Indian Registration Act, that it had not been registered and that as it had not been registered it could not be used for any purpose whatever and ought to be ignored by the court with the result that any claim for damages based by the respondent upon breach of that agreement must necessarily fail.

The questions therefore which arise for their Lordships' consideration are:

(1) Ought the appellant to be allowed to raise now for the first time before the tribunal of last resort the question as to the registration of the agreement?

(2) If the question as to registration can now properly be raised (a) did the agreement, which admittedly was not registered, require registration, and (b) if it did require registration, what is the effect of non-registration in regard to the respondent's right to claim damages under the agreement?

(3) If the question as to registration cannot now be properly raised, or if it can be properly raised but upon consideration of the merits of the question, it is held that the non-registration of the agreement does forward a claim for damages [under the agreement, whether the Company was or was not the undisclosed principal of M. E. Moolla in regard to the agreement?

To enable these questions to be considered, it will be convenient to state the facts so far as they are proved or admitted.

The company was formed under the Indian Companies Act, 1913, on the 21st January, 1911, as a private company.

Clause III (6) of the Memorandum of Association enabled the company to acquire by purchase, lease, exchange or otherwise land, buildings, and hereditaments of any tenure or description in Burma.

By Articles of Association 115 and 116 (2) the Directors had power to purchase for the company any property which the Company was authorised to acquire.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors held on the 1st February, 1921, Moolla was appointed Managing Director, with power to manage the business of the company as he thought fit.

He was further authorised to purchase and sell any property (moveable or immovable) as he thought best in the interest of the company.

The issued share capital of the company stood as to about 90 per cent. thereof in the name of Moolla, and as to the remainder in the name of his mother Mariam Bee Bee. The trial Judge said "the company was essentially a one man company, being for all practical purposes Moolla incorporate."

The company's office was also Moolla's office.

The agreement of the 27th July, 1921, was made between the respondent (described as the vendor) and Moolla (described as the purchaser) and contained no reference to the company. Omitting formal parts, the agreement was as follows:—

"1. The vendor agrees to sell to the purchaser and the purchaser shall purchase from the vendor the properties described in the schedule hereunder written measuring 12.54 more or less at or for the price of Rs. (Twelve thousand five hundred) per acre.

"2. That the purchaser had paid to the vendor Rs. (10,000) Ten thousand as earnest money, the receipt of which the vendor doth hereby acknowledge.

"3. That the purchaser agrees to complete the conveyance within three months from the 12th July, 1921, by paying the balance of the purchase money calculated at the rate aforesaid save and except a sum of Rs. (1,00,000) One hundred thousand which sum is to remain outstanding as in the clause next provided.

"4. The vendor agrees to keep the said balance of unpaid purchase money, namely, Rs. (1,00,000) One hundred thousand invested with the purchaser for a period not exceeding three to five years as the purchaser may wish on the purchaser paying interest thereon at the rate of eight per annum payable monthly and the same secured by the equitable mortgage of the premises hereby agreed to be sold, that is, by the purchaser depositing the title deeds of the said premises including the conveyance in his favour with the vendor.

"5. That the vendor shall make out a good and clean title to the said premises and produce for inspection the title deeds as soon as required by the purchaser".

The schedule contained a description of certain immoveable property in Burma belonging to the respondent. The acreage is given as 12.54 acres and on this basis, the total purchase price under the agreement would be Rs. 1,57,375. Upon the execution of the agreement Rs. 10,000 was paid to the respondent as earnest money.

The respondent had no personal contract with Moolla in connection with the negotiation for or the execution of the agreement. She acted by brokers throughout.

On the 31st December, 1921, the Board of Directors held a meeting, the Minutes of which state that "the following properties were purchased by the Managing Director during the course of the year on behalf of the company". A list of twenty-eight properties follows. The second on the list under date 13th July, 1921, is the property the subject of the agreement of the 27th July, 1921.

Of the twenty eight properties in the list twenty-five had been bought in the name of the company, three properties (including the respondent's property) had been purchased in Moolla's name and admittedly the two properties other than the respondent's property had been purchased on the company's behalf.

On the 30th March, 1923, the purchase being uncompleted, the respondent's brother-in-law wrote to Moolla asking for the balance of the purchase-price, or at least Rs. 15,000.

Moolla replied by executing four promissory notes in the respondent's favour, for a total of Rs. 40,000.

On the 20th November, 1923, the respondent gave to Moolla a receipt for Rs. 1,600 in respect of interest.

Further payments of interest were made up to February, 1927, but the purchase was never completed.

Moolla at the trial admitted that Rs. 15,000 in respect of the promissory notes and all interest was paid out of the company's funds. He alleged that the earnest money was paid by himself but refunded to him by the company. He stated that all the company's books prior to 1924 were destroyed under his instructions, and that he had no books to show that the earnest money came originally out of his own moneys. He alleged that he had purchased the property on his own account and had subsequently transferred the benefit of the agreement to the company. He produced no document to evidence the alleged transfer.

On the 6th April, 1927, a creditors' petition was presented to wind up the company and an order for winding-up was made on the 21st June, 1927, and one Hormasji was appointed liquidator.

Between the presentation of the petition and the making of the order, viz., on the 18th June, 1927, the respondent at the instance of Moolla filed in opposition to the petition an affidavit prepared by Moolla's clerk. In this affidavit she stated that she was a secured creditor of the company for Rs. 1,31,137-8 0. This was the sum then calculated to be owing under the agreement of the 27th July, 1921.

Moolla himself was declared insolvent on some date between April and June, 1927. His assets were practically nil. He did not enter the name of the respondent as a creditor in the schedule relating to his own affairs which it was his duty to file in the insolvency proceedings.

What subsequently followed is not clear.

The record before their Lordships' Board contains an affidavit sworn by the liquidator on the 17th February, 1928, on an application which he made to the Court for directions. This affidavit was treated as his evidence at the trial and at the trial no oral evidence was given by him.

The affidavit, omitting formal parts, is in the following terms:—

"1. On 27th July, 1921, Mr. M. E. Moolla in his own name entered into an agreement with Mrs. P. R. Burjorjee for the purchase of 12-54 acres of garden land near the Victoria Lake on the terms contained in the deed of agreement, a copy of which is herewith attached and marked "A."

"The balance of the purchase price save Rs. 1,00,000 which was to be invested with the purchaser was never paid and default was made in the payment of interest as stipulated in the agreement and consequently no conveyance was executed by the vendor.

"2. When the vendor applied persistent pressure and threatened to specifically enforce the agreement, Mr. Moolla in his own name on 1st April, 1923, executed four pro-notes for Rs. 15,000, Rs. 10,000, Rs. 10,000, and Rs. 5,000, towards the purchase price, out of which the first one for Rs. 15,000 was subsequently paid up in full."

"3. The payment of Rs. 10,000 on account of earnest money, of Rs. 15,000 in discharge of the pro-note for Rs. 15,000, dated 1st April, 1923, and of Rs. 41,409.12 0 on account of interest on the balance of purchase-price amounting in all to Rs. 66,409-12-0 was made from the funds of M. E. Moolla Sons, Limited, on different dates as detailed in the list annexed and marked "B." The payments have been debited in the company's books on the respective dates thereof.

"4. Throughout the correspondence, nothing is mentioned to show that Mr Moolla was acting as the agent of the company, except for some stray references in Mr. N. N. Burjorjee's letters and in the Minutes of a meeting of the Directors held on 31st December, 1921, copies of which are herewith annexed and marked "C" and "D" respectively.

"5. According to Art 111 of the company's Articles of Association, read with Minutes of Proceedings of meeting of Directors, dated 1st February, 1921 (of which copies are annexed marked "E" and "E-1") the Managing Director of the company had power to purchase properties for and on behalf of the company.

"The vendor has put in her proof of claim (copy annexed and marked "F") in which she offers to take over the property at Rs. 4,500 per acre. She has subsequently put in a valuation certificate by Mr. Joakim, Managing Director of Balthazar & Son, Limited (copy annexed marked "G") stating that the present market value of the land is about Rs. 56,000. I have (without advertising) endeavoured unsuccessfully to obtain a better offer than that made by the vendor and from inquiries made and judging by a recent sale by auction of similar land in the neighbourhood, I have come to the conclusion that Rs. 56,000 is about as high a price as could possibly be realised for the land at the present time."

Of the exhibits referred to in the affidavit, Exhibit "A" was a copy of the agreement of the 27th July, 1921, Ex "B" was a statement printed in the record before their Lordships described as "Statement of payments made from funds of M. E. Moolla Sons Limited."

This statement purports to show payments made by the company in respect of the agreement of the 27th July, 1921, to a total amount of Rs. 66,409-12-0 including Rs. 10,000 for earnest money paid by the company on the 27th July, 1921 and Rs. 15,000 to satisfy one of the promissory notes given by Moolla, paid by the company on the 7th July, 1923. The balance of the Rs. 66,409-12-0 was made up of interest payments in respect of the period between the 1st April, 1923 and February 1927.

With regard to the Exs. "C" and "D," reference has already been made to the material minutes of the Directors' meeting. The only letter of the respondent's brother-in-law, N. N. Burjorjee, printed in the record, is one asking for payment of the Rs. 15,000 and carries matters no further.

Exhibits "E" and "E1" dealt with the powers of the Managing Director to purchase immovables, which have never been in dispute.

Exhibit "F" is not printed in the record.

and the form of the respondent's proof is, therefore, not before their Lordships.

It is, however, reasonably clear from the affidavit (1) that the respondent had put in a proof of claim presumably on the same lines as that contained in her affidavit of the 18th June, 1927; (2) that for the purpose of minimising her claim to damages she had offered to take over the property at Rs. 4,500 per acre; (3) that the liquidator had neither admitted nor rejected her claim, but had applied to the court for directions, putting in the agreement and pointing out that there was a question whether Moolla was principal or agent.

The printed extracts from the official diary of the proceedings in the winding-up contains the following passage:—

"28th February, 1928.—Doctor for Mrs. Burjorjee, Munshi for Company. Clark for Chartered Bank. Official Liquidator in person.

"Let the property mentioned in the application of the Official Liquidator be sold by public auction after due advertisement, with a reserve price of Rs. 56,000. No orders will be passed on the present application of the Official Liquidator till after the sale, and his proposal will be sanctioned thereafter if Mrs. Burjorjee is still willing to abide by the terms of the arrangement.

"As regards Mrs. Burjorjee's claim against the company, it will be enquired into by me on 12th March, 1928, unless before that date the Official Liquidator and Mr. Clark for the company admit the claim. The sale may be held after the enquiry, and, if at the enquiry, I uphold Mrs. Burjorjee's claim, she will be given leave to bid at the auction and set off the purchase price against her claim pro tanto."

Their Lordships are informed and both parties are agreed that the property was in fact sold and the proceeds paid to the respondent.

Presumably it was sold under the order referred to in the extract from the diary. It is, however, obvious that no title could have been made without the concurrence of the respondent. An agreement of some kind between the Official Liquidator and the respondent in relation to the matter seems therefore to have been essential, though the appellant does not admit that there was any such agreement.

Having regard to the material before their Lordships' Board there may well have been such an agreement upon the lines that, the existence of an agreement for purchase at Rs. 1,57,375 and non-performance of that agreement by the purchaser being admitted, the parties arranged to minimise damages by concurring in a sale of the property and in handing the proceeds of sale to the respondent, the question whether the company was the principal in respect of the agreement of sale being the only question left open for the decision of this Court.

However this may be, the respondent subsequently amended her proof by giving credit for the purchase money, her claim being thus reduced to Rs. 63,219-15-0.

On the 16th July, 1929, the Official Liquidator rejected the claim, giving the following reason:

"I am not satisfied that the company was the real contracting party. The contract is, therefore, not binding on and enforceable against the company."

On the 29th July, 1929, the respondent petitioned to have the decision of the Official Liquidator reversed.

At the hearing of the petition the respondent gave oral evidence. Neither the official liquidator nor Moolla gave oral evidence. The affidavit of the official liquidator already referred to was treated as his evidence, and a deposition of Moolla made apparently at some earlier stage in the winding-up proceedings, was treated as his evidence.

In his evidence in chief, Moolla stated as follows:—

"I entered into the transaction with Mrs. P. R. Burjorjee as evidenced by the agreement of 27th July 1921. When I agreed to buy this land, I was buying it at first for myself. I myself was the buyer. I signed the pro-notes which were given as part consideration of the purchase-price. The pro-notes were given in my own name and I paid Rs. 10,000 as earnest money and that was my own money. (Minutes of M. E. Moolla & Sons, Limited, dated the 31st December, 1921, explained to the witness). I purchased that property and put it in the assets of the company. From 31st December, 1921, it was considered as the property of the company. The Directors of the Company agreed and as I did not want to sell the property I put it into the company. The company agreed to take it over in December, 1921. I presided at that meeting. Mariam Bee Bee is my mother. Hashim Eusoor Moolla is my brother's son (nephew). I held shares worth 1 crore and 53 lakhs and 50 thousand. The capital of the company was 1 crore and 65 lakhs. My mother held shares worth Rs. 11,50,000. The minute was recorded at my suggestion. It was at my suggestion that the company took over this deal. Apart from this minute there is no written document showing that this deal was taken over by the company. The receipts made out by Mrs. Burjorjee were made out in my name.

In cross-examination, Moolla said:—

"I still say (i.e.) that the purchases by me of Mrs. Burjorjee's, Emin's and Bymeah's properties were for the company. I don't remember whether I stated to Mr. Hormasji that the purchases made in my own name, of Mrs. Burjorjee's Emin's and Bymeah's lands were made for the company.

"When the Official Assignee examined me I made the following statements:—'As for properties purchased by me in my own name after the promotion of the company, they were treated as the company's properties because the purchase-money or part purchase-money was paid from the company and debited in the Company's accounts and they were bought for the company. There are only two such properties, viz., Mrs. R. N. Burjorjee's land and the house in Park Road mortgaged to Emin. The Tiger Alley property, which has been sold, was another such transaction, I shall furnish lists in a day or two of all properties held for the company though they are not in the company's name."

In reply to the Court, Moolla subsequently added "as regards Mrs. Burjorjee's land it was in my own name and this was because Mrs. Burjorjee refused to negotiate with the company."

Mrs. Burjorjee denied that she had refused to negotiate with the company and said in effect that she only knew of the company in the matter some time after the agreement.

The only matter debated before the Judge who tried the petition was the question of fact whether the company was in connection with the purchase the undisclosed principal of Moolla. The learned Judge held that Moolla purchased on his own account.

The respondent appealed. The question, and the only question, debated before the appellate side was that which had been debated below.

The appellate side reversed the trial Judge and held that the company was the principal in the matter.

Subsequently the appellant applied for a review of the judgment on the ground that Ex. "B" to his affidavit had been erroneous in so far as it showed the earnest money to have been paid out of the company's funds on the 27th July, 1921, the books of the company for 1921, having been destroyed and there being, therefore, no evidence of such payment.

The application for the review of judgment was rejected.

On the 7th January, 1931, leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council was granted to the appellant. In his application for such leave, the appellant for the first time raised the question of the non registration of the agreement in these terms: "This Honourable Court has omitted to take note of the fact that the agreement of sale of 27th July, 1921, had not been registered and was thereby invalid and inoperative." The same point was raised in his case before their Lordships' Board.

The first question for consideration, therefore, is ought the applicant to be allowed at this stage to raise for the first time the point of non-registration?

In Connecticut Fire Insurance Company v. Kavanagh (1, Lord Watson, in delivering the judgment of their Lordships' Board, said as follows:

"When a question of law is raised for the first time in a court of last resort upon the construction of a document or upon facts either admitted or proved beyond controversy, it is not only competent but expedient in the interests of justice to entertain the plea. The expediency of adopting that course may be doubted when the plea cannot be disposed of without deciding nice questions of fact in considering which the court of ultimate review is placed in a much less advantageous position than the Courts below. But their Lordships have no hesitation in holding that the course ought not in any case to be followed unless the court is satisfied that the evidence upon which they are asked to decide, establishes beyond doubt that the facts if fully investigated would have supported the new plea."

Section 49 of the Registration Act, which states the results of non-registration is, so far as material, as follows:—

"49. No document required by s. 17 to be registered shall

(a) affect any immoveable property comprised therein.

(c) be received as evidence of any transaction affecting such property unless it has been registered.

Their Lordships are satisfied that there is nothing in the section cited when properly construed to compel the Court to take notice of the non registration of an admitted document unless at any rate such document must, if treated as effective, be the foundation of a judgment affecting immoveable property comprised in such document.

Here the agreement has been admitted throughout. Indeed, it was first put in by the appellant. Further, the proceedings do not in any respect affect any immoveable property. The immoveable property affected by the agreement long since passed out of the picture, and the only claim in these proceedings is a personal one for damages for breach of an admitted contract against an alleged undisclosed principal who denies he was a principal.

Their Lordships therefore regard themselves as free to consider upon general principles, whether the appellant ought to be allowed to raise the point of non-registration.

They are satisfied that he ought not to be allowed to do so. It has already been pointed out that the circumstances in which the appellant's petition founding these proceedings was launched are by no means clear. The parties are not agreed upon the facts. There are indications of a course of conduct or agreement on the part of the liquidator which would preclude him from raising any point in the proceedings except that as to the respective positions of the company and Moolla in regard to the agreement of the 27th July, 1921,

In this state of the evidence, it would not in their Lordships' judgment be in accordance with the principles indicated by Lord Watson, in the judgment already cited, to take into consideration at this stage for the first time the point of the non-registration of the document.

It becomes therefore unnecessary to consider the second question as to the necessity for registration.

There remains the third and last question, one of fact upon which the courts below have differed, viz. was the company the undisclosed principal of Moolla in relation to the agreement of the 27th July 1921.

Their Lordships are satisfied that the company was the undisclosed principal of Moolla. All the contemporary documents support this view. There is nothing in Moolla's conduct inconsistent with it. There is much in his conduct which, though not necessarily inconsistent with the other view, points strongly in the direction of his having acted as the company's agent throughout. His own evidence was obscure and contradictory, and he was not seen in the witness box by the trial Judge. In their Lordships' opinion the learned Judges of the appellate side reached a correct conclusion upon the issue of fact.

In the result, therefore, the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

LORD BLANESBURGH, LORD TOMLIN AND SIR GEORGE LOWNDES.

BENGAL—APPELLANT

versus

SHAW, WALLACE & COMPANY—

RESPONDENTS

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), ss. 2, (4), 4 (3), (vii) 6 (iv), 10, 12—Amounts paid to agents as compensation for cessation of agency—Whether assessable income—'Income', 'business', meanings of—Principles of liability.

The word 'income' in the Income Tax Act connotes periodical monetary return 'coming in' with some sort of regularity or expected regularity from definite sources. The sources need not be continuously productive but must be one whose object is the protection of a definite return excluding anything in the nature of a mere wind fall.

Though the words used in the definition of 'business' in s. 2 (4) of the Act are wide, underlying each of them there is the fundamental idea of the continuous exercise of an activity, and in order that an income may be assessable under the head of business in s. 6 of the Act, it is essential that the business must one carried on by the assessee. It must be profits earned by a process of production.

The expression 'receipts arising from business' in s. 4 (3) (vii) means receipts arising from the carrying on of business. In re Turner Morrison & Co. (1), disapproved.

Where the assessee acted as distributing agents of certain oil companies and on the termination of the agency the assessee was paid a certain sum of money as compensation for cessation of the agency:

Held, that the amount so received by the assessee was not assessable income in as much as it was not the produce or the result of carrying on the business of agency but was received as a sort of solatium for its compulsory cessation.

Messrs A. M. Lunne, K. C. and R. P. Hills, for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. M. Latter, K. C. and Cyril King, for the Respondent.

Sir George Lowndes.—This is an appeal from a judgment of the High Court at Calcutta delivered on a reference made to it under s. 66 of the Indian Income Tax Act, XI of 1922. The reference arose out of an assessment to income tax upon the respondents for the year 1929-30, in respect of an item of Rs. 9,13,361, part of a larger sum of Rs. 15,25,000 received by them in 1928 as compensation for the termination of certain agencies.

The respondents carry on business in Calcutta as merchants and agents of various companies, and have branch offices in different parts of India. For a number of years prior to 1928 they acted as distributing agents in India of the Burma

Oil Company and the Anglo-Persian Oil Company, but had no formal agreement with either company. In or about the year 1927 the two companies combined and decided to make other arrangements for the distribution of their products. The respondents' agency of the Burma Company was accordingly terminated on the 31st December, 1927, and that of the Anglo-Persian Company on the 30th June, following. Some time in the early part of 1928 the Burma Company paid to the respondents a sum of Rs. 12,00,000 "as full compensation for cessation of the agency," and in August of the same year the Anglo-Persian Company paid them another sum of Rs. 3,25,000 as "compensation for the loss of your office as agents to the company." The quotations are from letters by which the payments were recorded, and are accepted on both sides as correctly expressing the nature of the transactions.

The Income Tax Officer, in computing the assessable income of the respondents for the relevant year, took these two receipts into account as profits or gains of their business in the year ending the 31st December, 1928, but allowed certain deductions therefrom in respect of compensation paid by the respondents to various employees, leaving a balance of Rs. 9,83,361 which he included in the total income of the respondents found assessable for the year 1929-30.

The respondents objected to the assessment, and appealed to the Assistant Commissioner, who confirmed the assessment. Thereafter, on the requisition of the respondents, the Commissioner drew up a statement of the case, and referred the questions of law therein set out to the High Court with his own opinion thereon, which was against the contentions of the respondents.

The questions so formulated were as follows:—

"(a) Was not the sum of Rs. 9,83,361 which had been included in the total income of the assessee for purposes of assessment for 1929-30, in the nature of a capital receipt and, therefore, not income, profits or gains within the meaning of the Income Tax Act?

(b) If it could be said to be income, profits or gains within the meaning of the Act, was it liable to be assessed under either of the ss. 10 and 12 of the Act, inasmuch as (1) it was not the profits, or gains of any business carried on by the assessee within the meaning of s. 10 of the Act, nor (2) income, profits or gains from other sources within the meaning of s. 12 of the Act?

(c) In the alternative, was not the payment of Rs. 9,83,361 an ex gratia payment in the nature of a present from the oil companies in question and was it not, therefore, exempt under s. (4) 3 (vii) of the Act."

The reference was heard by the Chief Justice sitting with Ghose and Buckland, JJ. The judgment of the High Court was delivered by the Chief Justice, his colleagues concurring.

The learned Judges appear to have returned a formal answer only to question (a) which the Chief Justice stated to be "the real question in the case." He thought that if the respondents could not escape by reason of the contention raised by this question they must fail. The other questions, he thought, fell within a recent decision of the Court in the case of In re Turner Morrison & Co. (1) he had nothing to add to what was then said on these points.

Their Lordships agree that the real matter for decision falls under (a), but they think that this question is not happily worded, as it seems to suggest that it was only if the sum there referred to was "in the nature of a capital receipt" that it would be exempt from assessment, whereas the more correct proposition would seem to be that it was only if it was in the nature of an income receipt that it would fall to be assessed to the tax. The question was, however, re-stated by the learned Chief Justice in more precise terms, viz., "whether these sums are income, profits or gains within the meaning of the Act at all," and for the reasons stated in his judgment he came to the conclusion that they were not. Their Lordships think that his conclusion was right though they arrive at this result by a slightly different road.

In one part of his judgment the Chief Justice seems to hold that the "compensation for loss of these agencies is a receipt in respect of a capital asset in the nature of goodwill," but it has been objected with some force that there is nothing upon which this finding can be based. There was, so far as the facts disclose, no transfer of the goodwill of the respondents, and no agreement by them not to compete with the new selling agency of the companies.

In another part of the judgment the payment seems to be regarded as in the nature of compensation in lieu of notice. But here again their Lordships think that there are no facts to support such a conclusion, and they doubt if s. 206 of the Indian Contract Act upon which reliance is placed has any application.

(1) 117 Ind. Cas. 689; 56 C. 211; 33 C. W. N. 112; A. I. R. 1929 Cal. 212 (F. B.).

Again their Lordships would discard altogether the case law which has been so painfully evolved in the construction of the English Income Tax Statutes—both the cases upon which the High Court relied and the flood of other decisions which has been let loose in this Board. The Indian Act is not in pari materia; it is less elaborate in many ways, subject to fewer refinements, and in arrangement and language it differs greatly from the provisions with which the Courts in this country have had to deal. Under such conditions their Lordships think that little can be gained by attempting to reason from one to the other, at all events in the present case in which they think that the solution of the problem lies very near the surface of the Act, and depends mainly on general considerations.

The object of the Indian Act is to tax "income," a term which it does not define. It is expanded, no doubt, into "income profits and gains," but the expansion is more a matter of words than of substance. Income, their Lordships think, in this Act connotes a periodical monetary return "coming in" with some sort of regularity, or expected regularity, from definite sources. The source is not necessarily one which is expected to be continuously productive, but it must be one whose object is the production of a definite return, excluding anything in the nature of a mere windfall. Thus income has been likened pictorially to the fruit of a tree, or the crop of a field. It is essentially the produce of something, which is often loosely spoken of as "capital." But capital, though possibly the source in the case of income from securities, is in most cases hardly more than an element in the process of production.

The sources from which the taxable income under the Act are to be derived are enumerated in s. 6, which runs as follows:—

"Save as otherwise provided by this Act, the following heads of income, profits and gains, shall be chargeable to income-tax in the manner hereinafter appearing, namely:—

- (i) Salaries.
- (ii) Interest on securities.
- (iii) Property.
- (iv) Business.
- (v) Professional earnings.
- (vi) Other sources."

The claim of the taxing authorities is that the sum in question is chargeable under head (iv) business. By s. 2 (4) business "includes any trade, commerce or manufacture, or any adventure or concern in the nature of trade, commerce or manufacture." The words used are no doubt wide, but underlying each of them is the fundamental idea of the continuous exercise of an activity. Under s. 10 the tax is to be payable by an assessee under the head business "in respect of the profits or gains of any business carried on by him." Again, their Lordships think, the same central idea; the words italicised, are an essential constituent of that which is to produce the taxable income: it is to be the profit earned by a process of production. And this is borne out by the provision for allowances which follows. They include rent paid for the premises where the business is carried on; the cost of current repairs in respect of such premises; interest on money borrowed for carrying on the business, etc.

Some reliance has been placed in argument upon s. 4 (3) (v) which appears to suggest that the word "income" in this Act may have a wider significance than would ordinarily be attributed to it. The sub-section says that the Act "shall not apply to the following classes of income," and in the category that follows, cl. (v) runs:—

"Any capital sum received in commutation of the whole or a portion of a pension, or in the nature of consolidated compensation for death or injuries, or in payment of any insurance policy, or as the accumulated balance at the credit of a subscriber to any such Provident Fund."

Their Lordships do not think that any of these sums, apart from their exemption, could be regarded in any scheme of taxation as income, and they think that the clause must be due to the over anxiety of the draftsman to make this clear beyond possibility of doubt. They cannot construe it as enlarging the word "income" so as to include receipts of any kind which are not specially exempted. They do not think that the clause is of any assistance to the appellant.

Following the line of reasoning above indicated, the sums which the appellant seeks to charge can, in their Lordships' opinion, only be taxable if they are the produce, or the result, of carrying on the agencies of the oil companies in the year in which they were received by the respondents. But when once it is admitted that they were sums received, not for carrying on this business, but as some sort of solatium for its compulsory cessation, the answer seems fairly plain.

If the business had been sold—even if that somewhat indeterminate asset known as the "goodwill" had been assigned to the employing companies, as the High Court seems to have thought it had—it is conceded that the price paid would not have been taxable. But why? Plainly because it could not be regarded as profit or gain from carrying on the business, and their Lordships think that the same reasoning must apply when the sum received is in the nature of a solatium for cessation.

It is contended for the appellant that the "business" of the respondents did in fact go on throughout the year, and this is no doubt true in a sense. They had other independent commercial interests which they continued to pursue, and the profits of which have been taxed in the ordinary course without objection on their part. But it is clear that the sum in question in this appeal had no connection with the continuance of the respondents' other business. The profits earned by them in 1928 were the fruit of a different tree, the crop of a different field.

For the reasons given their Lordships are of opinion that question (a) was rightly answered by the High Court in favour of the assessee. No objection has been taken to the form of the answer or to its sufficiency, and it would seem unnecessary therefore to deal with the other two questions. Their Lordships will only add that the reasoning of this judgment would apply equally if the appellant based his claim on head (vi) "other sources" and the corresponding provisions of s. 12.

With regard to the claim to exemption under s. 4 (3) (vii), their Lordships think that the decision in the case of In re Turner Morrison & Co., (1), to which reference has been made above, may need re-consideration in the light of this judgment. In their Lordships' view the expression "receipts arising from business" in that clause must mean receipts arising from the carrying on of business.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

ABDUL HAMID KHAN—APPELLANT

Raja SAADAT ALI KHAN AND OTHERS

RESPONDENTS

Oudh Estates Act I of 1869, s. 29—Muhammadan Talukdar—Widow's power to adopt—Adoption after re-marriage—Validity.

The widow of a Muhammadan talukdar of Oudh has under the terms of s. 29 of the Oudh Estate Act (which confers on her the power to adopt) no power to adopt a son after re-marriage and an adoption made by her after her re-marriage is therefore, invalid. [p. 746, col. 1.]

Mr. B. Dube, K. C., for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C., M. A. Jinnah and S. Hyam, for the Respondents.

Sir George Lowndes.—The appellant in this case is the claimant to a large and valuable talukdari estate in Oudh, known as taluka Nanpara, the succession to which is governed by Act I of 1869. The 1st respondent was at the date of the suit in possession of the estate and unless the appellant is able to show a better title in himself, it is admitted that he cannot succeed.

The last full owner was Raja Muhammad Siddiq Khan, who died without issue on the 30th December, 1907. He left four widows him surviving, and by his will gave successive authorities to each of them to adopt a son. The 1st respondent is in as the adopted son of the second widow, Rani Saltanant. The appellant claims to oust him as the adopted son of the fourth widow, Rani Ohampa, on the ground that his (the appellant's) adoption was the only valid one. The other respondents are in possession of parts of the estate under a compromise with the 1st respondent.

The main question in the suit was whether the adoption of the appellant, the factum of which is admitted, was valid, and the first line of defence was that Rani Ohampa had been re-married to one Sher Muhammad Khan before the adoption of the appellant, and that for this reason his adoption was invalid.

The question of the re-marriage was contested at great length in the Oudh Court, as is testified by the bulky record now before the Board. The appellant, in addition to denying the re-marriage in fact, asserted that, previous to the date on which it was alleged to have taken place, Sher Muhammad Khan had been married to the sister of Rani Champa, and this was put forward as making the story of the latter's re-marriage impossible, it being admittedly contrary to the Muhammadan Law for a man to be the husband of two sisters.

The trial Judge and the Court of Appeal have concurrently held that the re-marriage of Rani Champa with Sher Mahomed Khan, on a date prior to the adoption of the appellant, is established by the evidence. They are also agreed that the alleged previous marriage with the Rani's sister, the burden of proving which was clearly upon the appellant, is not established. These findings must, in accordance with the recognized practice of the Board, be held conclusive as to the fact of the re-marriage.

It only remains to consider an alternative contention of the appellant that the re-marriage did not invalidate the adoption. This again has been negatived by both the Indian Courts, mainly on the strength of cl. 10 of Raja Muhammad Siddiq Khan's will. The official translation of this clause, which was before the trial Judge, was in the following terms:—

"If any of the Rani's contract a second marriage after me she shall not be entitled to be profited by any of the paragraphs of this will."

The learned Judge held that the power of adoption was on the same footing as a power of appointment and therefore "a benefit or privilege" conferred on the widow which she would, under the terms of this clause, forfeit upon re-marriage. He also thought that under s. 29 of the Oudh Estates Act (1 of 1868), by which a conditional power of adoption is given to the widow of a Muhammadan Talukdar, the power could only be exercised by her if she were still his widow at the time of making the adoption.

In the Court of Appeal the translation of cl. 10 of the will was amended by the learned Judges, and this has now come up to the Board under the official seal of the court. The amended translation runs as follows:—

"If any of the Rani's contract a second marriage after me she shall not be entitled to avail herself of any of the provisions of this will."

The learned Judges thought that on this reading of the clause it was clear that Rani Champa "on her re-marriage with Sher Muhammad Khan forfeited her power of adoption, and consequently the plaintiff's adoption made by her on the 25th July, 1914, is invalid."

Their Lordships, while not disagreeing with the reasoning of either of the Indian Courts on this question, think that the same result is to be arrived at in another way.

The parties being Muhammadans, there is no power to adopt under their personal law, and it is only conferred by s. 29 of the Act, and must be confined strictly within the limits there laid down. The section is as follows:—

"Every Muhammadan Talukdar, grantee, heir or legatee, and every widow of a Muhammadan Talukdar or grantee, heir or legatee, with the consent in writing of her deceased husband, shall, for the purposes of this Act, have power to adopt a son whenever, if he or she were a Hindu, he or she might adopt a son."

The power is thus exercisable by the widow of the talukdar only under such circumstances that if she were a Hindu she would be entitled to adopt. It can, their Lordships think, hardly be doubted that a Hindu widow could not, after re-marriage, make a valid adoption to her former husband. Indeed, this is conceded by Mr. Dube, who has presented the appellant's case with ability and restraint. Their Lordships think that it necessarily follows that the Muhammadan Talukdar has, under the terms of the section, no power to adopt a son after her re-marriage, and that, therefore, the adoption of the appellant was invalid and conferred upon him no right to the Nanpara estate.

For these reasons their Lordships think that this appeal fails and that the appellant's suit was rightly dismissed by the trial Judge, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly. The appellant must pay the costs of the appeal.

versus

RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Succession—Gotraja sapinda, meaning of—Gotra, meaning of—Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869), s. 22 (10)—‘Male agnate’, meaning of—Test of determination.

The meaning of ‘male agnate’ in s. 22 (10), Oudh Estates Act, cannot be determined without recourse to the ordinary law which would govern the succession apart from the statute.

In order that a person may be male agnate or gotraja-sapinda of the propositus it must be proved, first, that he is of the same gotra, that is, of a common patriarchal stock and, secondly, that he is a sapinda of the deceased, that is, connected by blood through a common ancestor, the connection being traced through males.

In the absence of challenge on this point, it might well be that proof by a person that he was a sapinda of the propositus would be sufficient to raise a presumption that he was also gotraja, but, on his being challenged on this point, it is for him to satisfy the court that he complies with this condition also, before he can succeed in his claim to the succession. [p 748, col 2.]

The term “agnate” is not a term of art in the English legal system; in the English language, though not in frequent use, it is a known term, used to indicate relationship on the father’s side or exclusively through males and it is a word expressive of relationship similar to “son” or “brother.” [p 742, col. 2.]

The word ‘gotra’ has only one meaning and denotes descent from common patriarchal stock.

Messrs. A. M. Durne, K. O., and J. M. Parikh, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Upjohn, K. O., L. DeGruyther, K. O., and W. Wallach, for the Respondent.

Lord Thankerton.—In accordance with the view expressed in the judgment of this Board dated the 4th December, 1930, the issue raised in the third appeal has been reheard before a fuller Board. By that judgment it was decided that the succession to the taluka Gangwal is governed by the Oudh Estates Act, and in particular by s. 22 (10), which, as amended in 1910 is as follows—

“(10) Or in default of or on the death of such mother, then to the nearest male agnate according to the rule of lineal primogeniture, subject as aforesaid.”

The last talukdar was Raja Suraj Prakash Singh, and the plaintiff’s pedigree shows Bhaya Partap Singh as their common ancestor, and in accordance with the previous judgment the plaintiff must be held to have established that, in blood relationship, he is the nearest male blood relation according to the rule of lineal primogeniture of Raja Suraj, the last male holder of the taluka. It is clear from the context that this finding relates to physical blood relationship and does not exclude the possibility—raised by the issue in the third appeal—of the legal right of succession, so far as expressed as blood relationship, having been lost, e. g., by adoption.

The sole question in the third appeal is whether the plaintiff has proved that he is an “agnate” of the propositus within the meaning of s. 22 (10): if so, he is admitted to be the nearest male agnate according to the rule of lineal primogeniture.

In the first place, their Lordships are clearly of opinion that the meaning of ‘male agnate’ for the purposes of the section cannot be determined without recourse to the ordinary law which would govern the succession apart from the statute—in this case the Hindu Law of succession according to the rules of the Mitakshara. The term “agnate” is not a term of art in the English legal system; in the English language, though not in frequent use, it is a known term, used to indicate relationship on the father’s side or exclusively through males. In their Lordships’ opinion, it is a word expressive of relationship, similar to “son” or “brother,” to which the rule of construction laid down in Raghuroj Chandra v. Subhadra Kunwar () falls to be applied. The only express prescriptions of the Act relative to ‘male agnate’ are that it denotes only legitimate relatives (s. 2), and that it applies only to najib-ul-tarfain, i. e., those of noble birth on both sides (s. 21). Subject to these qualifications, the meaning of ‘male agnate’ falls to be ascertained by the personal law of the individual, to whom the succession is to be established.

Turning to the law of the Mitakshara, their Lordships have no doubt that “male agnate” denotes a gotraja sapinda, as to which an authoritative exposition is to be found in Bhyah Ram Singh v. Bhyah Ugur Singh (2). Sir Robert Phillimore, in delivering the judgment of this Board says (page 396*):

“The Mitakshara, in the 5th and 6th sections (1) 108 Ind. Cas. 673; 55 I. A. 139; A. I. R. 1928 P. O. 87; 5 O. W. N. 443; 26 A. L. J. 609; 30 Bom. L. R. 829; 3 Luck 76; 32 O. W. N. 1009 (P. C.). (2) 13 M. I. A. 373 at p. 391; 5 B. L. R. 293; 2 Suther 330; 14 W. R. P. O. 1; 2 Sar. 566 (P. O.).

of the second chapter, recognises two successive classes of heirs: first, 'Gentiles', next, Bandhoo; after them it places certain special persons, and after these last the State, the ultimus hoers. Whatever descent prevails, and even where the State takes by escheat, in the duty of some ceremonial performance to the deceased is still enjoined. The family is the cherished institution of Hindus. Individual separate ownership is less the subject of the general remarks of Commentators on the Hindu Law than the associated aggregate community, the family. In this respect an analogy is observed between family ownership and that of the old village community. Consequently, family union or connection derived from a common head, the founder of the family, may reasonably be regarded, amongst a patriarchal people, as the source of the entire class from which a succession of heirs may be derived. Again, as males are preferred to females in succession from religious reasons, this same class may be reasonably subject to the condition that the descent be generally derived from males, who, for the same reason, may obtain a constant preference. The text of the whole of the 5th and 6th sections of the 2nd chapter of the Mitakshara is in the strictest conformity to these principles. The Gentiles, or Gotraja (from the Gotra) are described as descending from one common stock, a male, and derived generally through males, as forming a family, though embracing, possibly, many families, and such original bond of union is regarded as necessary to the constitution of the Gotra. These conditions are all that are stated as necessary to the constitution of the class of Gentiles. As regulating preference of succession amongst them, the law of succession amongst Gentiles classifies them further, as sapindas and samanodacas; the first it treats as prior to the second, but excludes neither, within limits wide enough to include the present plaintiffs. As the plaintiffs, then, in this case show a common ancestor, a Gotra a community of family, a descent which extended to the deceased and themselves, they appear to satisfy every condition of the text."

From this it is clear that, in order to qualify as a male agnate, or gotraja-sapinda of the propositus, the plaintiff must satisfy two conditions, viz.: (a) that he is of the same gotra, or, as it may be expressed, of a common patriarchal stock, and (b) that he is a sapinda of the deceased, that is, connected by blood through a common ancestor, the connection being traced through males.

It is now settled that sapinda-ship under the Mitakshara Law arises from the community of corporal particles, and is not dependent on the right to participate in the offering of funeral oblations; the latter may be of importance in settling the order of preference of heirs in the same class, but is not relevant in a question of exclusion from a class of heirs. Lulloobhoy Bap-pobhoy v. Cassibai (3) and Ramchandra Martand Waikar v. Vinayak Venkatesh

Kothekar (4). It may further be noted that the bandhus, or cognates, have a technical meaning in the system of the Mitakshara and signify the bhinna-gotra sapindas, that is, those not belonging to the same gotra or family (Ramchandra, supra cit 4.)

The pedigree of the plaintiff in the present suit shows his community of corporal particles with the propositus through a common ancestor, Bhaya Partap Singh, traced through males, and, to that extent, the pedigree has been held proved, as already stated. He has, therefore, satisfied one of the two requisite conditions, i. e., that he is a sapinda of the propositus; but the main issue in the third appeal is whether the plaintiff has proved that he satisfies the other condition, namely, that he is of the same patriarchal stock or gotra. In the absence of challenge on this point, it might well be that proof by the plaintiff that he was a sapinda of the propositus would be sufficient to raise a presumption that he was also gotraja, but, on his being challenged by defendant No. 2 on this point, it is for the plaintiff to satisfy the court that he complies with this condition also, before he can succeed in his claim to the succession.

Defendant No. 2 maintains in this appeal that it is established on the evidence that the gotra of the propositus was Vaiyaghra, and the plaintiff's gotra being admittedly Atri, they cannot be related as agnates (gotraja sapinda) under the Mitakshara Law, and that, in any event, the plaintiff has failed to prove that the propositus, like himself, belonged to the Atri gotra. The plaintiff maintains that the evidence sufficiently establishes that he was of the same gotra as the propositus, but that, if this conclusion is not justified, the case should be remitted for further enquiry on this point, as the issue was not fairly or fully raised in its present form at the trial or in the courts below.

It was ultimately agreed by both parties (a) that, if in fact the propositus was of the Vaiyaghra gotra and the plaintiff was of the Atri gotra, this difference of gotra necessarily led to the conclusion that the plaintiff is not an agnate, i. e., gotraja sapinda, of the propositus, and (b) that such difference of gotra could only be accounted for by adoption into a different gotra, of the plaintiff or one of his paternal ancestors since the common ancestor, Bhaya Partap Singh.

In the previous judgment their Lordships expressed the view that this issue had not been clearly or adequately placed before either of the lower courts, and, after reconsideration before a fuller Board, their Lordships are confirmed in this view.

The question of gotra was not raised in the pleadings, written or oral. Defendant No. 2 put the plaintiff to the proof of his pedigree, and his only express contention was that Jugraj Singh, the younger son of Partab Singh, died childless. The only issue that could be held to cover this point was No. 7, which is as follows: "Is the plaintiff the nearest heir under the Act by the rule of lineal primogeniture to Suraj Prakash Singh, or under the custom applicable to the family?"

At the trial, gotra was first mentioned during the cross examination of the plaintiff, when he stated, "My gotra is Aitra gotra"; he was not further examined on this point by either side. It is next referred to in cross examination, for defendant No. 2, of two witnesses for defendants Nos. 1 and 3 (D. W. No. 15 and D. W. No. 18), and is dealt with by a series of witnesses for defendant No. 2. About halfway through this latter body of witnesses a statement by plaintiff's Counsel is recorded to the effect that the plaintiff did not admit that the gotra of the Gangwal family was Vaiyaghra, but that the Gangwal family belonged to Atri gotra.

It seems reasonably clear from the judgment of the trial Judge that difference of gotra was only used before him as affecting the question whether Jugraj Singh had died childless, in other words, as involving a break in the blood relationship of the plaintiff with Jugraj Singh. There appears no trace of an argument that, granted the blood relationship, the difference of gotra would still negative the plaintiff's claim to be the nearest agnate.

The learned trial Judge held it proved by the defendants' witnesses that the Gangwal talukdars were of the Vaiyaghra gotra, though he thought that this conclusion was weakened by the fact that that point was not put to the plaintiff or his witnesses in cross examination; he also thought it possible that the plaintiff might have stated his gotra incorrectly or his ancestors might have forgotten to what gotra they belonged and then taken whatever gotra was suggested by their prohits or priests. On consideration of Sastri's Treatise on Hindu Law and Dr. Gour's Hindu Code, he came, apparently reluctantly, to the conclusion that it is possible that persons descended in the male line from a common ancestor can belong to two different gotras, and stated "whatever the explanation of the difference of gotras may be, I am not prepared to accept this difference as conclusive proof that the plaintiff and his family are not agnatic relations of the talukdars of Gangwal in the manner claimed. Counsel for defendant No. 2 should have put his case to the plaintiff in cross-examination. Probably he feared that if he did so the plaintiff might be able to explain the apparent difficulty. I think it is impossible to explain away the admissions made by Raja Sitla Bakhsh Singh and his mukhtar to which I have referred above." The admission referred to was made in a suit in 1868 by Sheo Nath, the plaintiff's father, against Raja Sitla, the first talukdar of Gangwal, claiming that certain villages had been given as bhayai to the plaintiff's ancestors: in his answer the Raja stated "The plaintiffs do belong to the defendant's family, but these villages were not given to them as a bhayai, i. e., portion. Defendant's ancestors gave Gularia to plaintiff's ancestor in 1244 as jagir." The learned Judge also referred to the conduct of Rani Itraj Kuar in 1900, when Sheo Nath Singh made an application to have the estate taken under the Court of Wards on the ground of mismanagement by Rani Itraj Kuar and the detriment to himself as next reversioner, and the omission of the Rani to suggest that Sheo Nath Singh was in no way related to the talukdar's family and therefore had no locus standi to present the application. The learned trial Judge concludes:—

"In my opinion, therefore, the plaintiff has satisfactorily established his agnatic relationship to Raja Suraj Prakash Singh in the manner set forth in his pedigree."

Their Lordships are satisfied that the admissions of Raja Sitla and conduct of Rani Itraj Kuar do not involve any admission as to identity of gotras between the two families.

The Chief Court, in their judgment, say:—

"On the question of the plaintiff's relationship with Raja Sitla Bakhsh Singh [? Raja Suraj Prakash Singh] 'the case put forward and argued before us on behalf of Lal Harihar Partab Bakhsh Singh, the defendant-appellant in Appeal No. 19, is that Jugraj Singh the second son of Partap Singh, died issueless, or at least that the plaintiff has failed to prove that he is the descendant of Jugraj Singh. It was not disputed that Jugraj Singh was one of the two sons of Partap Singh. We agree with the trial Court that the plaintiff has succeeded in establishing the fact that he is the descendant of Jugraj Singh according to the line of descent indicated in the pedigree above set forth. The evidence seems to be overwhelming and there is no evidence worth the name in rebuttal."

After dealing with the evidence, including the admissions of Raja Sitla about 1868, the learned Judges state:—

"In agreement with the trial Court, we therefore hold that the plaintiff has succeeded in establishing the fact that he is an agnate of the late Suraj Prakash Singh.

It is obvious that the word "agnate" is loosely used in that finding, for after disposing of a question as to the seniority of the plaintiff's line, which was not in dispute before this Board, the judgment proceeds:—

"Against the broader question of relationship, which we have decided in agreement with the trial Court in favour of the plaintiff, the only argument advanced on behalf of the defendants and particularly Lal Harihar Pratap Bakhsh Singh, defendant No. 2, is that the plaintiff and Raja Suraj Prakash Singh could not be held to each other, in spite of all the evidence to the contrary, on the ground that the two belonged to different gotras. On the face of it the argument is highly technical and its pursuit has landed us into the region of Hindu tradition."

After quoting the first part of the passage cited above from the judgment of this Board in Bhyah Ram Singh's case (2), the learned Judges state:—

"Technically and prima facie, therefore, if the plaintiff and the talukdar of Gangwal are descended from a common ancestor, they should have one and the same gotra."

Differing from the trial Judge's view of the evidence as to the gotra of the talukdar of Gangwal, the learned Judges considered that the matter was not free from doubt, and suggested that there were two meanings of gotra, one technical and the other popular. They seek to attribute to the plaintiff's use of the term gotra a so-called popular meaning as referring to his being a Sombansi, and they conclude as follows: "On these grounds we are unable to give effect to this argument as sufficient to outweigh the direct and positive evidence as to the relationship of the two families."

As already indicated, their Lordships are of opinion that gotra has only one meaning and they find it difficult to believe that, if the question now raised had been clearly in issue ab initio, there would have been any difficulty in producing evidence to identify beyond judicial doubt or speculation the gotras of the plaintiff and Raja Suraj Prakash Singh. Their gotras must be well known to relatives who attended the Sraddh ceremonies, at which the gotra of the three paternal ancestors is recited, and such evidence is conspicuous by its absence. There should be no need to resort to the "region of Hindu tradition."

Their Lordships are therefore of opinion that the case should be remitted to the Chief Court in order that the plaintiff may have the opportunity of establishing the identity of his gotra with that of Raja Suraj Prakash Singh; upon this issue his success or failure in his claim to the taluka will now depend.

In accordance with the previous judgment of this Board, dated the 4th December, 1930, and this judgment, their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty as follows:— That the decree of the trial Judge dated the 4th January, 1927, be recalled except in so far as it dismisses the plaintiff's claim in respect of the property mentioned in Schedules B, C, E and F appended thereto, that the decrees of the Chief Court in Civil Appeals Nos. 19 and 24 of 1927 be recalled; that the First Appeal (No. 102 of 1927) be dismissed, the appellant (defendant No. 1) to pay the plaintiff's costs of the appeal and of Civil Appeal No. 24 of 1927; that the second appeal (No. 103 of 1929) be allowed, the appellant's costs to be paid by defendant No. 1; that the Third Appeal No. (104 of 1929) be allowed without costs, and the case be remitted to the Chief Court as above proposed, the costs of all parties in the trial Court, of the parties in Civil Appeal No. 19 of 1927, and of further procedure to be adjudged by the Chief Court.

VICOUNT DUNEDIN, SIR LANCLOT SANDBERSON

AZIZ AHMAD KHAN AND OTHERS—

RESPONDENTS

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 82—Several properties securing a mortgage—Valuation for contribution purposes—Determination of—'Incumbrance,' meaning of.

To arrive at the value for contribution purposes of each of several properties on which a particular mortgage is secured, the amount of all prior incumbrances upon such properties must be ascertained and deducted. Where properties A, B and C are all made security for one mortgage, if property A is subject to a prior incumbrance jointly with properties X, Y and Z, the rateable share to be attributed to A under the prior incumbrance must necessarily be assessed in order to ascertain its value for the purposes of the mortgage. It is not correct to say that all that would be necessary in such a case would be to see what was the total amount of prior incumbrance to which A was liable, irrespective of the question whether that liability was to be shared by X, Y and Z. [p. 751, cols 1 & 2.]

"Incumbrance" is a term of wider connotation than "mortgage." [ibid.]

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and J. M. Parikh, for the Appellants.

Sir George Lowndes.—This appeal is concerned with a tangle of mortgages made over a number of years by one Jamil-ul-Rahman. He owned or had interests in a variety of immoveable properties which were scattered over the different transactions. Some have been brought to sale by one mortgagee or another; some have been redeemed by puisne mortgagees for the protection of their own interests, and subsequently transferred to other parties subject to the rights of prior incumbrancers; in some cases arrangements have been made as to the contribution due by the purchaser of this or that property; but no final settlement as between all the parties concerned has ever been come to either in or out of court.

The mortgage with which the present proceedings are directly concerned was dated the 23rd September, 1899. It was the sixth in the series in order of date and comprised ten different properties, eight of which were also included in one or other of prior or subsequent mortgages.

In 1911 the mortgagee under this deed sued upon his mortgage. A preliminary decree in the usual form was made on the 20th September, 1912, and a final decree for sale on the 16th May, 1914.

Thereupon one Chotey Lal, the first defendant in the suit, a puisne mortgagee in respect of one of the properties which had been ordered to be sold, known as Nagla, satisfied the decree by a payment of Rs. 20,000 odd, and by a deed of the 15th July, 1920, transferred the rights which he had thereby acquired to the first respondent and the predecessor-in-title of the other respondents.

Chotey Lal's object was apparently to free Nagla from further liability, and having regard to similar arrangements which he had made with other parties who were also incumbrancers of Nagla, to provide for the realisation of the moneys due under the decree from two other properties known as Shadipur and Inayetpur.

In pursuance of the terms of this deed the respondents Nos 1 to 8 on the 25th April 1922, instituted the suit out of which this appeal has arisen. They impleaded thirty-six defendants as persons having an interest in the mortgaged properties, and prayed that in default of payment of the sum of Rs. 26,972 8-0 with further interest, the amount claimed as due under the decree transferred to them by Chotey Lal, the Shadipur and Inayetpur properties should be sold. In the alternative they prayed for an account and contribution.

Nine different statements of defence were filed by different sets of defendants, but this appeal is concerned only with two of them, viz., that of the appellants Nos. 1-4, who are interested in Shadipur, and that of appellant No. 5, who is interested in Inayetpur.

The trial Judge held that the plaintiffs-respondents' claim to realise their dues from Shadipur and Inayetpur only was not maintainable. This claim was abandoned in the Court of Appeal and may therefore be disregarded.

On the alternative claim for contribution which he thought must necessarily involve a detailed examination of all liabilities affecting each of the properties, he held that the plaintiffs had failed to bring all the parties concerned on the record, and had also failed to put before him materials sufficient to enable him to work out the account. He accordingly dismissed the suit, his decree being dated the 13th November, 1923.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court at Allahabad, the learned Judges of which disagreed with the trial Judge as to the basis upon which the contribution fell to be assessed. They were of opinion that

"the learned Judge of the Court below was wrong in believing that it was incumbent on him to find out, in the case of each prior mortgage, what were the properties mortgaged along with any of the items mortgaged under the sixth transaction, what were the values of those properties, who were the owners of those properties, and so on."

They, therefore, set aside the decree of the trial Judge, and remanded the suit to be disposed of by him in accordance with the remarks contained in their judgment. He was also directed to bring on the record any parties whose presence before him he should still find to be necessary.

Of the parties who defended the appeal in the High Court, only the present appellants have come up to His Majesty in Council to support the decree of the trial Judge. The respondents have not appeared.

The right to contribution in this case is governed by s. 82 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. A new section has now been substituted by an amending Act (XX of 1929), but it is not necessary for their Lordships to refer to the changes which have been effected by it.

The first paragraph of the section in question is the material one. It is in the following terms:—

"Where several properties, whether of one or several owners, are mortgaged to secure one debt, such properties are, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, liable to contribute rateably to the debt secured by the mortgage, after deducting from the value of each property the amount of any other incumbrance to which it is subject at the date of the mortgage."

To arrive at the value for contribution purposes of each of several properties on which a particular mortgage is secured, it is clear that the amount of all prior "incumbrances" upon such properties must be ascertained and deducted. Their Lordships are in agreement with the High Court that "incumbrance" is a term of wider connotation than "mortgage," but they are unable to follow the learned Judges in the argument they base upon this proposition. Where properties A, B and C are all made security for one mortgage, if property A is subject to a prior incumbrance jointly with properties X, Y and Z, their Lordships think that the rateable share to be attributed to A under the prior incumbrance must necessarily be assessed in order to ascertain its value for the purposes of the mortgage. In the view taken by the High Court all that would be necessary in such a case would be to see what was the total amount of the prior incumbrance to which A was liable, irrespective of the question whether that liability was to be shared by

X, Y and Z. Their Lordships are unable to adopt this view of the meaning of s. 82. It would no doubt greatly simplify the enquiry in such a case as the present, but simplification would only be attained by a sacrifice of what they regard as the principle involved.

The view taken by the trial Judge upon this part of the case was, in their Lordships' opinion, the right one, and as it does not appear to have been contended in the High Court that, upon this basis, there were sufficient materials before the court to work out the necessary account, their Lordships think that the suit was rightly dismissed. If it had been merely a question of non-joinder of parties their Lordships would, having regard to the provisions of O. I, r. 9, of the Civil Procedure Code, have agreed with the learned Judges of the High Court that the defect could be remedied in the way pointed out by them.

Their Lordships have not found it necessary to deal with a question of limitation which was discussed at considerable length in the High Court, and the finding upon which has been contested by the appellants' Counsel before the Board. The question is one of considerable complexity, and they think it undesirable to make any pronouncement upon it in an ex parte appeal.

For the reasons given their Lordships think that the appeal should be allowed; that the decree of the High Court should be set aside, and that of the trial Judge, dated the 13th November, 1923, restored. They will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly. The respondents Nos. 1 to 8 must pay the costs of the appellants both in the High Court and before this Board.

KHAIRATIRAM—APPLICANT

EMPEROR—OPPONENT

Approver—Corroboration—Nature of evidence required—Corroboration as against some, effect of—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 110, orders under—Revision—Interference.

Evidence in corroboration of an accomplice's evidence must be independent testimony which affects the accused by connecting or tending to connect him with the crime. It must be evidence which implicates him, that is, which forms in some material particular not only the evidence that the crime has been committed but also that he personally committed it. The corroboration need not be direct evidence that the accused committed the crime; it is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connection with the crime. [p. 755, col. 2.]

Where there is one witness of bad character (an accomplice) giving evidence against two prisoners, a confirmation of his testimony with regard to one, is no confirmation of his testimony as to the other. If, therefore, there is a corroboration applicable to one prisoner, it may be taken as against him; but unless it exists with regard to both it would be unjust to give it a general effect. King v. Baskerville (1), followed. [ibid.]

Though in cases under s. 110, Criminal Procedure Code, the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Sind, does not sit as a Court of appeal, nevertheless when there appears anything unsatisfactory or unusual in the proceedings of the lower court, that court will look into the record to satisfy itself that an order under s. 110 has been properly passed. [p. 754, col. 1.]

Messrs. Motiram Iaanmal and Santdas Idanmal, for the Applicants.

Mr. C. M. Lobo, Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

FARRERS, J. C.—The facts underlying this application are as follows:

On the 15th of September 1930 at the City Police Station, Karachi, something exploded. What this thing may have been is uncertain. The defence call it a cracker. The prosecution prefer to describe it as a bomb. To justify the more formidable appellation no evidence has been led. It is agreed however that in fact there was no harm done; not even a pane of glass broken. The incident became the subject of a Police investigation and on the 23rd of September 1930 the Inspector came in touch with a man called Ishwarchand who from that time forward was working as a Police spy. On the 16th of October, 1930, the Deputy Superintendent of Police searched the shop of Bhojraj Nevandram on the Marriot Road. He took possession of a cyclostyle machine and a bundle of copies of a paper headed "Balvo" Bulletin. Bhojraj is the father of Jethanand accused No. 3, but neither Bhojraj nor Jethanand was present at the search. Neither of them lives in the place in which these things were found. On the 2nd of November, 1930 the Inspector Gholam Kader searched the house of accused No. 2. In it there was found a pocket diary containing certain entries which will be referred to later. The house of accused No. 3 was again searched the same day but nothing was found. On the 2nd of November, the Poster which is Ex. 17 was found stuck up in several places. This poster is written in misshapen letters by an unpractised hand. It is in the following words:

"As Karachi C. I. D., is roaming hither and thither like Blind ones, so in order to give them some right trace we hereby declare that on every Sunday Night at 12-30 a. m., we Manufacture Bombs on the Ocean Bank near Clifton. If Police want to arrest the party they should come there preparing themselves to face, the Red Flashes and hot wounds of Bomb and Bullets.

Note.

Public is also informed that the Bombs are sold in Gandhi Garden at 4 a. m. on Saturday night at the rate of 8 annas each.

By order of Commander of Revolutionary Party in Sind.

The Poster is signed by a sketch of a sickle and a hammer.

On the 7th of November, there was a second explosion at the same place as the first and with no more result. On the 9th of November, Ishwarchand who had been acting since the 23rd of September as a Police Spy made a statement in writing. He declared that eight persons who he named were all members of a Revolutionary Party in Karachi. All these 8 were arrested on the 10th November. It was apparently at first intended to prosecute the prisoners under the appropriate sections for some specific offence or offences. A remand was applied for and granted. At the expiration of that remand on the 24th of November the Inspector of Police prayed the court to take action against the accused under ss 110 and 117, Criminal Procedure Code. His allegations were that they were all working in concert and were so desperate and dangerous that their remaining at large was hazardous to the Public. The accused were at that time in custody. On the 26th of November the Magistrate made an order directing each of the accused to execute a bond for Rs. 20,000, with two respectable sureties owning landed property worth Rs. 20,000 each for maintaining good behaviour, until the conclusion of this case. In Magistrate's Court the case came to a conclusion on the 7th of March 1931. On that day accused Nos. 1, 4 and 7 were discharged under section 119 Criminal Procedure Code and an order was made that accused Nos. 2, 3, 5, 6, and 8 should enter into a bond for Rs. 10,000 each with two respectable sureties owning landed property in the same amount for their good behaviour for 12 months.

Against this order the persons affected appealed to the Sessions Court. In that court their appeal was duly heard and on the 12th of August 1931 the Judge set aside the order of the Magistrate so far as it affected Nos. 5, 6, and 8. The order in respect of 2 and 3 was upheld.

No. 3, who is Jethanand, has furnished the security which was required of him, No. 2 Khairatiram is in custody. No further appeal was competent but Khairatiram and Jethanand have come to this court in revision.

In cases under s. 113 this court does not sit as a Court of Appeal. The responsibility of administering the provisions of that section does not rest upon us. Nevertheless when there appears anything unsatisfactory or unusual in the proceedings of the Lower court a High Court will look into the record to satisfy itself that an order under s. 110 has been properly passed.

Now in the present case it is distinctly stated by the learned Magistrate that the principal evidence against the applicants is that of the approver Ishwarchand. The learned Magistrate might have gone further. It would not be too much to say that the whole case rests entirely upon the testimony of this man Ishwarchand. It is necessary therefore to see what manner of man he is, and what the evidence is which he gives.

We think therefore that even if we accept all the findings of fact which appear to have been accepted by the learned Judge there is still nothing which can be said to form a sufficient corroboration of the allegation made by Ishwarchand. We are perfectly satisfied that without corroboration this man Ishwarchand is altogether unworthy of credit.

For these reasons we discharge the order made by the learned Magistrate. Khairatiram who is in Jail will be set at liberty and the security bond given by Jethanand will be discharged.

Rupchand, A. J. C.—Police Inspector, Sind C. I. D., lodged information before the Additional City Magistrate, Karachi, against the appellants Jethanand and Khairatiram and six others under s. 110 cl (f) Criminal Procedure Code, alleging that they were members of a revolutionary party formed for the purpose of destroying Government buildings, injuring Government Officers and committing robberies, and that this party was responsible for (a) throwing of bombs over the City Police Station on September 15, and November 17, 1930, (b) the issue of the 'Balvo' Bulletin containing revolutionary articles and (c) the sticking of posters advertising the sale of bombs. He prayed that pending the inquiry the suspects should be ordered to furnish security under the provisions of s. 117 cl. (3). Criminal Procedure Code.

On that information the learned Additional City Magistrate passed orders under ss. 112, and 117, (c) fixing the amount of security at Rs. 20,000, in the case of each suspect and called on them to show cause why they should not be bound down to be of good behaviour for a period of 12 months.

It will be convenient to refer here in their chronological order to certain events connected with this case.

It is said that on September, 15, 1930, a bomb was thrown at the City Police Station which however caused damage to any person or property. About that time a poster is said to have been discovered by the Police headed "Sale of bombs in Karachi".

Towards the end of that month, one Ishwarchand, a Punjabi who is said to be one of the revolutionaries, was employed by the Police as a spy, and on information supplied by him, the Police kept a watch on the movements of these eight suspects and actually shadowed both by day and night the applicant Khairatiram and two others who are not now before us.

On October, 16, the Police searched certain premises belonging to the father of Jethanand and secured from there a cyclo-style machine, a number of copies of certain pages of a magazine headed, 'Balvo' Bulletin (i. e. Mutiny or Revolutionary Bulletin). They also secured from the pocket of a coat lying there pieces of paper which contained extracts from Mill's History on British India Vol. VII, page 358 and their translations.

On November 2, 1930, the Police secured a poster said to be revolutionary in its nature. On the same day they searched the house of Khairatiram and secured from him a diary to which reference will be made later.

On November 4, 1930, another poster also said to be revolutionary in its nature, was secured by the Police from a garden.

On November 7, a second bomb is said to have been thrown near the Police Station which likewise did no damage.

On November 9, Ishwarchand made a statement Ex. 2-A in the case before the Police implicating these eight persons as members of a revolutionary party, which he said, had been organised by a Bengali Senji.

It is not necessary to refer to what he said with regard to the suspects who are not now before us.

With regard to Jethanand he said: (a) that he was the person entrusted with enrolling of new members, (b) that he supplied the purse, (c) that he published the Congress Bulletin, (d) that on one occasion he had asked the witness to translate for him a piece of English from Mill's History of British India, Vol. VII, page 308, but that he had refused to do so, (e) that he had published a revolutionary article (Ex. 5) written by Khairatiram, and (f) that he was responsible for putting up one of the alleged revolutionary posters.

With regard to Khairatiram, he said (a) that his duty was to prepare bombs and teach the method of making bombs to others, (b) that about a month before that date Khairatiram had noted a prescription for making bombs in his diary, (c) that he was responsible for putting up one of the posters, and (d) that he had thrown one of the bombs.

On the same day, namely, November 9, all the eight suspects were arrested and charged with criminal conspiracy and throwing bombs in pursuance thereof. After obtaining two remands, the Police dropped that case, and lodged information which is the subject-matter of the present inquiry.

At the trial, the Crown mainly relied on the evidence of the approver. The learned Additional City Magistrate held that in regard to several particulars the evidence of the approver was hardly believable and that such of his evidence as was not found to be false could not be safely relied upon unless it received material corroboration from other evidence. He accordingly discharged the rule against three out of the eight suspects but passed orders against the remaining five including the two applicants. He, however, reduced the amount of their security from Rs. 20,000 to Rs. 10,000.

On appeal to this court on its Sessions Courts Side, the learned Judicial Commissioner (Mr. Milne) also experienced some difficulty in accepting the evidence of the approver with regard to three out of the five suspects who had been ordered to furnish security, as the evidence of the approver was, in his opinion, not corroborated by other evidence. He accordingly discharged the rule as against them. With regard to the applicants he remanded the case to the lower Court to enable the Crown to prove and exhibit certain documents which had been secured from the house of Jethanand at the search held on October 16, and after that evidence was certified, he dismissed their appeal. They have now come to us in revision.

Now in this case there is no question whatsoever of accepting the uncorroborated testimonies of Ishwarchand under the provisions of s. 133 of the Act. Apart from the fact that he is an approver and was employed as an spy for over 2 months his antecedents are far from satisfactory and on the top of it he has been held by the learned Magistrate to be false in some particulars.

The leading English case on the nature of corroborative evidence required to support the evidence of an accomplice is that of the King v. Baskerville (1). In that case Lord Reading, O. J. has said at page 667:*

"We hold that evidence in corroboration must be independent testimony which affects the accused by connecting or tending to connect him with the crime. In other words, it must be evidence which implicates him, that is, which forms in some material particular not only the evidence that the crime has been committed but also that he personally committed it. The corroboration need not be direct evidence that the accused committed the crime; it is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connection with the crime".

And while dealing with the further question whether the evidence of an accomplice against the prisoners corroborated as to one prisoner's participation in the crime but not as to the other, his Lordship has said at page 669:

"We think the law is correctly stated by Alderson B. in Reg. v. Jenkins, (2). The learned Baron said where there is one witness of bad character giving evidence against both prisoners, a confirmation of his testimony with regard to one, is no confirmation of his testimony as to the other. If, therefore you find there is a corroboration applicable to one prisoner, take it as against him; but unless it exists with regard to both, it seems to me it would be unjust to give it a general effect."

(2) (1857) 1 Cox. O. C. 177.

*Page (1916) 2 K. B. [44.]

These principles of law are equally applicable in India. The Crown had therefore to give corroborative evidence on two points:

(1) that there was a revolutionary party in Karachi, and (2) that each of the applicants was a member of such party.

In dealing with the case of Jethanand, the learned Judicial Commissioner (Mr. Milne) has said that the evidence of the approver receives corroboration by the finding of the cyclo-style machine and copies of certain pages of a cyclo-styled bulletin headed the 'Balvo' Bulletin, the get up of these pages being similar that of Ex 5 produced by the approver; and has further said at page 18, line 910 of the paper-book:

"There is sufficient proof then of the existence of a revolutionary party in Karachi, the throwing of bombs, the publication of revolutionary posters, the issue of revolutionary bulletins. The evidence of the approver shows this. There is also sufficient evidence accused's connection with it"

It is worthy of note that notwithstanding the great array of Criminal acts which were attributed by the approver to Jethanand, the only piece of corroborative evidence relied upon by the learned Judicial Commissioner is of what was found at the search and nothing more.

Now, the copies of the bulletin found at the search held on October 16, 1930, and exhibited after the order of remand, have, for reasons best known to the Crown, not been officially translated. The learned Judicial Commissioner (Mr. Milne) has not relied upon anything contained in them. All that he appears to have relied upon is the fact that these bulletins are headed 'Balvo' which he has translated as 'Revolution'.

We asked the Public Prosecutor to draw our attention to anything contained in the body of the pages exhibited which is said to be of a revolutionary character, but he has discreetly declined to do so. It would therefore not be rash for us to assume that these sheets contain no revolutionary articles. With regard to the name by which the bulletin was styled, it would without further evidence be difficult to presume from its name that the paper was a revolutionary paper and more so, to presume that it was a paper owned and published by a revolutionary party whose object was the throwing of bombs, the publication of revolutionary posters and the committing of dacoities.

It is also clear that the cyclo-style machine and the copies of the bulletin found in the premises of Jethanand's father were not secured subsequent to the date on which Ex. 2-A was recorded but twenty-five days before. It is difficult to presume that the approver did not know of the search or what was found at the search at the time he gave his statement to the Police especially when in that statement he has mentioned the page and volume at Mill's History of British India. It is hardly likely that he could have remembered these particulars when according to his own admission he had declined to translate the papers and had returned the papers to Jethanand.

It is also difficult to identify the cyclo-style machine and the 'Balvo' Bulletin found at the search with Ex. 5, is not dated but it purports to be a 'Divali Parcho' (sheet) probably published on the Divali Day which fell, as ascertained from the court diary, on October 20, 1930, that is to say, four days later than the search. The only copy of the Divali Parcho or sheet exhibited in the case is Ex. 5. The approver cannot say where it was published and where and when he got the copy; and no attempt was made to secure other copies. It had also not been seriously contended that Ex. 5 was printed and published before the day of the search. On the contrary, it has been conceded that it was probably printed and published after that day; and that is more probable. It does not purport to be one of the missing pages of the bulletin found at the search. The fact that no replica of Ex. 5 were found at the search is in itself considerable evidence of Ex. 5, having been impressed elsewhere and at a subsequent time. That being so, Ex. 5, has nothing to do with the cyclo-style machine or the 'Balvo' Bulletin found at the search. Our attention has not been drawn to any evidence on the record to prove that the get up of Ex. 5 and of the bulletins found in the search identical, and it is difficult to form any opinion on that point by a mere comparison of one with the other. The only thing which the prosecution can possibly rely upon is that Ex. 5 was also headed 'Balvo'. Assuming therefore that the posters are not a hoax as alleged and that Ex. 5 which is not the work of the approver or of some evil-minded person bent upon mischief, and that they are as a matter of fact revolutionary in their nature, and are the work of a revolutionary party, there is no evidence which can be called corroborative evidence, much less independent evidence to connect Ex. 5 with Jethanand or to connect Jethanand with such revolutionary party. The circumstances that a cyclo-style machine and pages of a bulletin called 'Balvo' Bulletin or papers containing extracts from Mill's History of British India were found at the search is equally consistent with Jethanand being a member of the Congress Party wedded to the plea of non-violence which he claims to be. The case against the accused Khairatiram is still weaker. The only corroboration relied upon is, that the diary found at the search of his house contained the following note on one of its pages:

"Potash nitras,"

These words by themselves denote nothing. All that is alleged is that no doubt these ingredients are used for several purposes but along with several other ingredients they are also used for the purpose of making bombs. In dealing with this point, the learned Judicial Commissioner (Mr. Milne) has said that although the entry may have been perfectly harmless, it was an unusual entry and that the failure of of the accused to explain it was sufficient corroboration of the approver's story. With all respect, I cannot accede to that view. There is nothing on the record to show that the attention of Khairatiram was invited to this alleged piece of corroborative evidence, or that although he was afforded an opportunity of explaining it, he had failed to do so. There is nothing in his examination under s. 342, Criminal Procedure Code, to suggest that his attention was drawn to it, nor is there anything in the information lodged by the Inspector which has been referred to above or in the order passed under s. 112, Criminal Procedure Code, to invite his attention to it. The order under s. 112, Criminal Procedure Code, is as vague as it could possibly be. It reads as follows:—

"Whereas it appears to this court that you the abovesaid accused are working in concert, and are so desperate and dangerous that your remaining at large without security is hazardous to the public: "You the abovesaid accused are hereby required to show cause &....."

This piece of circumstantial evidence was compatible with the innocence of Khairatiram and was on the very face of it capable of an easy explanation. Had his attention been drawn to it, an explanation would have been forthcoming. The effect of this alleged corroborative piece of evidence is, in my opinion, therefore nil.

Apart from that, it would appear that, as in the case of Jethanand, the diary of Khairatiram was secured prior to the date on which Ex. 2-A was recorded, and that it is therefore more likely than not that the statement made by the approver was based upon what had been found by the Police.

Under the circumstances, it is, with all respect, difficult for me to hold that the evidence of the circumstances relied upon by the learned Judicial Commissioner (Mr. Milne) was corroborated proof of the accused being members of a Revolutionary Party.

For these reasons, I concur in the order passed by the learned Judicial Commissioner.

Suit No. 131 of 1930.

November, 6, 1931.

ASTON, A. J. O.

FAKIR MUHAMMAD—PLAINTIFF

FAKIR MUHAMMAD NANJI AND OTHERS
—DEFENDANTS.

Malicious prosecution—Essentials of action—Matters to be proved—Discharge, effect of—Burden of proof of innocence—Malice, necessity of—Measure of damages—Costs of defence—Danger to liberty—Witnesses, liability of.

In a suit for damages for malicious prosecution the discharge of the accused cannot by itself be considered as evidence of the groundlessness of the prosecution, but when the accused is discharged and he brings a suit for damages no obligation is imposed on him to prove affirmatively that he was innocent. Baboo Gunesh Dutt Singh v. Mugneeram Chowdhary (1) and Balbhadar Singh v. Badrisah (2), followed. [p. 759, col. 1.]

Malice is a necessary ingredient in a suit for damages for malicious prosecution. Abdul Shakur v. Lipton & Co (4), followed. [p. 760, col. 2.]

Witnesses cannot be sued for damages in respect of evidence given by them in a judicial proceeding. Baboo Gunesh Dutt Singh v. Mugneeram Chowdhary (1), followed. [p. 761, col. 1.]

In a suit for damages for malicious prosecution the plaintiff is entitled to legitimate expenses incurred in defending himself in the criminal Court. Krishna v. Corporation of Calcutta (5), followed. [ibid.]

The Court in a suit for damages for malicious prosecution can take into consideration not only the injury to the reputation of the plaintiff but also the danger to liberty. [p. 761, col. 2.]

Mr. Fatehsand Asudomal, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Srikishendas H. Lulla, for the Defendant.

Judgment.—This is a suit filed by the plaintiff to recover Rs. 5,000 from the de-defendants as damages for malicious prosecution. The plaintiff's case is that on or about 28th October 1929 the defendants maliciously and without reasonable or probable cause gave information to the Police that the plaintiff had caused grievous hurt to defendant No. 1. In consequence of the false information, the plaintiff was arrested on 6th December 1929 and a prosecution was launched against him, which ended in his discharge on 30th January 1930. The plaintiff lost heavily in trade; he spent large sums in defending himself, and suffered pain of body and mind. The plaintiff's particulars of the damage are as follows:

Fees to Pleaders	Rs. 1,050
Miscellaneous expenses for copies and other Court expenses	Rs. 100
Loss in karkhana	Rs. 2,350
Loss of earning	Rs. 500
Pain of mind and reputation	Rs. 1,000

The defendants in their written statement deny that the information given by the defendants or any of them was given without reasonable and probable cause; they deny that it was malicious or improbable or unreasonable. The prosecution says was launched by the Police and such information as was given by them to the Police was in answer to inquiries made by the Police in a cognizable case; the defendants were under law bound to answer the inquiries of the Police. The defendants dispute their liability for damages; they contend the alleged damages for loss in the karkhana, loss in earning and pain of mind and reputation are too remote, that the Crown is a necessary party and that the suit is bad for misjoinder.

The following were the consent issues:

1. Is the suit bad for misjoinder of parties and causes of action (Covers para. 6 of W. S)?
2. Is the suit bad for non-joinder (Covers para. 7 of W. S)?
3. Was the information given by the defendant or any one of them false and malicious and without probable and reasonable cause, (Covers para. 1 of the plaint and paras. 1 and 2 of W. S)?
4. Was the arrest, if any, and prosecution on such as would afford any ground to the plaintiff for an action of Civil liability? (Covers para. 1 of W. S.)
5. Did plaintiff suffer any damages and are the same attributable to the said arrest and prosecution? If so, to what damages, if any is the plaintiff entitled (Covers paras. 4, 5 and 9 of W. S.).
6. Is the claim false and vexatious? If so, are the defendants or any of them entitled to compensatory costs? (Covers para. 8 of W. S.).
7. General.

A little after 8 P.M. on the evening of 25th October, defendant No. 1 and his two sons, defendants Nos. 2, and 3, were driving home in a buggy. They were suddenly attacked by Khoja ruffians, disguised, as Sindhis. One of them seized the reins, another struck defendant No. 1 with a hatchet. Defendant No. 1 received wounds on his forehead, on his right hand, and on his arm. As a result of one of the wounds, he received, he has permanently lost the sight of his right eye. During the cowardly attack, defendant's eldest son hit one of the assailants on the face with the carriage whip. Defendant was driven to hospital. In consequence of telephone message received by Head Constable Muhammad Shah from Dr. Khialdas that defendant No. 1 was lying dangerously ill, Inspector Arthur went to the Civil Hospital, about 9 P.M. and recorded the statement of defendant No. 1 who was in great pain. Defendant No. 1 said he had been set upon by three men who were Khojas near Banias crossing. He was struck by one of them named Meherali with an axe. Meherali was the only person he identified. So far as he could remember the other two did not strike him. The Head Constable recorded the statement of defendants Nos 2 and 3. Defendant No. 2 said that as they were driving along Soldier Bazaar Road, they saw three men near the house of Malik Sahib on the right hand side and one man on the left hand side. The man on his side seized the reins, one of the men on the side of his father struck his father blows with a hatchet. He could not identify the men as they had covered their faces. His younger brother Sharif, defendant No. 3, said his statement was the same. On the following morning Habib and Sharif were called to the Police Station and their statements were verified by Inspector Arthur. They said the same thing. Between 26th October and 30th October Sub-Inspector Sunderdas was in charge of the investigation.

The Police had discovered Sindhi's clothing lying at a distance of about 400 yards from the scene of the offence. So enquiries were made from cloth merchants whether they had sold them to anyone. Nothing resulted from this clue, but on his return the Sub-Inspector met a Makrani named Kadirbux who informed him that one Elias had told him that he had seen the incident. Elias was questioned on 28th October. He did not confirm the statement of Kadirbux, but he gave to the Police the names of Gul Muhammad and Ali Muhammad. Gul Muhammad, on being questioned said he saw the plaintiff and Meherali beating defendant. No. 1. Ali Muhammad said the plaintiff Fakir Muhammad was one of the assailants; he did not know the names of the others. The Sub Inspector was aware of the fact, that defendant No. 1 had made a statement to Inspector Arthur on the night of the offence, stating that he had only identified Meherali. He stated in evidence that he wished to know whether defendant No. 1 would corroborate the story of Gul Muhammad and Ali Muhammad, so he went to the hospital at 2-30 p. m. on 28th October and defendant No. 1 was again questioned. On this occasion the defendant No. 1 implicated the plaintiff and Rajoo as well as Meherali. On 16th November, 1929, the papers were sent by the Police to the Public Prosecutor for opinion. His opinion was received on 25th November and on 3rd December, 1929, the A. S. P. gave orders to prosecute. The plaintiff was arrested. The three defendants gave evidence at the trial that plaintiff was one of the assailants. The plaintiff was discharged.

The decision of the Magistrate discharging the accused, considered by itself, is not evidence against the defendants of the groundlessness of the prosecution: see Baboo Gunesh Dutt Singh v. Mugneeram Chowdhary (1). On the other hand the obligation is not imposed on the plaintiff to prove affirmatively that he was innocent: Balbadar Singh v. Badri Sah (2).

It is open to me to adopt the reasons set forth in the judgment of this court, on its appellate side, in the criminal revision application of Meherali Lalji, see Ex. 9, to the extent that they are applicable to the evidence in this case.

For the reasons so clearly set forth in that judgment, I am of opinion that it is established that defendant No. 1 and his sons, defendants Nos. 2 and 3, failed to identify any of the assailants on the night of 25th October. It was a dark night; there was no moon; the street light was at a considerable distance; there were only two candles in the carriage lamps, the Khoja assailants were disguised as Sindhis and were wearing "ajraks." Had any of the assailants been identified his name would have been mentioned, while the party were driving to hospital, and the boys would have mentioned his name to the Police.

Defendant No. 1, who alleged that he had identified Meherali, clearly told Inspector Arthur, that he had failed to identify any one else, and he explained the reason why. The evidence shows that he was specifically questioned on the point. It was suggested, that defendant No. 1 was incapable, owing to the injuries which he had received, of giving a correct statement to the Inspector. I am of opinion that this suggestion is incorrect. The statement of defendant No. 1 to Mr. Arthur (Ex. 5), except as regards his alleged identification of Meherali, was in my opinion substantially a true statement. And the same applies to the statements made by defendants Nos. 2 and 3 to the Head Constable on 25th October and to Inspector Arthur on 26th October.

I also agree with the view expressed in the judgment to which I have referred that the three assailants were probably persons who objected to the reforming activity of defendant No. 1.

The evidence shows that there are two parties in the community. The orthodox party are followers of His Highness the Agha Khan. Plaintiff belongs to this party and his father is a prominent member of it, for he is a member of the Council of the Khoja community. Defendant No. 1 belongs to the party of reform. Before the date of the cowardly attack on him, he was ex-communicated, on the complaint of one Mulji Ghulam Ali, because of his views and because he filed a suit against His Highness and against the Council of the Khoja community. So high did feeling run against reformers, that when the father of defendant No. 1 died, members of the orthodox party actually objected to defendant No. 1 accompanying his father's body to the burial ground, and put down the corpse on the road. The matter was not settled until defendant No. 1 agreed to accompany the body only as far as the burial ground, and then return without entering the burial ground. The evidence does not appear to establish enmity on the part of defendant No. 1 against plaintiff's family. The fact that he filed a suit ten years ago against the plaintiff's father, for a trifling amount viz., Rs. 20 or so, would not give cause, to defendant No. 1 to feel enmity. An attempt was made by plaintiff to prove that defendant No. 1 was ex-communicated on the complaint of plaintiff's father, but this is not established. On the contrary Ex. 23 shows the complaint was made by Mulji Ghulam Ali

(2) 95 Ind. Cas. 329; A. I. R. 1926 P. C. 46; 1 Luck 215; 29 O. C. 163; 24 A. L. J. 453; 3 O. W. N. 499; 43 C. L. J. 521; 28 Bom. L. R. 921; (1926) M. W. N. 482; 51 M. L. J. 42; 30 C. W. N. 866; 7 P. L. T. 591 (P. O.).

There is nothing to show that plaintiff or his father joined in the objection to defendant No. 1 carrying the corpse of his father. Even if it is true, as plaintiff alleges, that he went to call the Police, this would not give cause for enmity to defendant No. 1. He was doing nothing wrong. It was in his interest, that the Police should come, in order that fighting and bloodshed might be averted.

Why then defendant No. 1 in the subsequent statement he made to the Sub-Inspector on 29th October and in his evidence in the Magistrate's Court implicate the plaintiff? I think the answer is to be found in the fact, that defendant No. 1 believed that the assailants were members of the orthodox party. Plaintiff is the son of a prominent member of that party; there was also the fact that defendant's son had hit one of the assailants in the face with the carriage whip and plaintiff was seen in these days going about with a mark on his face. Sub-Inspector Sunderdas noticed the mark but he did not question plaintiff about it, fearing to rouse his suspicion.

My conclusions, therefore, on the evidence are as follows: Defendant No. 1 did not set the law in motion against the plaintiff nor did his sons. The Police investigation was due to the telephonic message sent by Dr Khialdas. When questioned by Inspector Arthur in hospital on 25th October defendant No. 1 made a substantially true statement, except as regards the alleged identification of Meherali. Defendant No. 2 and defendant No. 3 also told a true story to the Head Constable on the 25th and to Inspector Arthur on 26th October. None of the defendants implicated the plaintiff. Had the case rested there, no action would have been taken against the plaintiff, but in the course of their investigation the Police obtained from one Elias the name of Gul Mahomed and Ali Mahomed. The persons alleged they witnessed the occurrence and both of them implicated the plaintiff. The plaintiff had been seen to bear a mark on his face and the Police were informed that defendant's elder son had struck one of the assailants on the face with the carriage whip. In a further statement made by defendant No. 1 to Sub-Inspector Sunderdas on 29th October and in the evidence given by defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in court they implicated the plaintiff. The statement of defendant No. 1 to Sub-Inspector Sunderdas and the evidence given by defendants in court to the effect that they had actually identified plaintiff as one of the assailants was in my opinion false. The false statement and the false evidence however was not in my opinion given in consequence of malice. I am of opinion that defendants believed that their relative the plaintiff was one of the assailants.

The facts established appear to me to come short of the fact, which a plaintiff has to prove, to entitle him to damages for malicious prosecution. It cannot be said in the present case as in Gaya Prasad Tewari v. Bhagat Singh (3) that defendants were directly responsible for any charge at all being made against the plaintiff. It cannot be said as in that case that they took the principal part in the conduct of the case. Again the facts in this suit are distinguishable from those in Balbhadra Singh v. Badri Sah (2) inasmuch as it was not the information given by the defendants to the Police, which naturally led to the prosecution of the plaintiff. From the Police point of view the evidence available from defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 against the plaintiff was at the best weak corroborative evidence contradicted by their prior statements to the Police. The evidence of defendant No. 1 was liable to be contradicted by his own allegations in what an appellate Bench of this court has held to be a first information. The evidence of all the defendants besides was liable to be contradicted, if the accused or their Pleader were vigilant enough to exercise their right under the Criminal Procedure Code of requesting the court to read the statements made by the defendants to the Police and to supply the defence with a copy of them. The evidence of Sub-Inspector Sunderdas itself shows that he regarded the information, at best, as corroborative. Knowing the prior statement of defendant No. 1 he went to hospital on 29th October after having received information from Gul Mahomed and Ali Mahomed, to see whether defendant No. 1 would corroborate the witnesses. In addition to the above facts there was in my opinion an absence of malice on the part of defendants and malice is a necessary ingredient: see Abdul Shakur v. Lipton & Co (4).

No evidence was given as regards the alleged subsequent statements of defendants

Nos. 2 and 3 to the Police. On behalf of the plaintiff the court was asked to draw an inference from the written statement that these defendants falsely implicated the plaintiff. The written statement however is not clear on the point. There is a denial of para. 1 and the use of the words "if any" appears to me to negative the suggestion that defendants admitted that they made the statement imputed implicating plaintiff. So far as their evidence is concerned, it is settled law that witnesses cannot be sued for damages in respect of evidence given by them in a judicial proceeding: see Baboo Gunnessh Dutt Singh v. Magneeram Chowdhry (1).

As regards issue No. 1 there appears to me no force in the plea of misjoinder. The defendants were together at the time of the assault, they all failed to implicate plaintiff when first questioned and they implicated him subsequently. My finding is in the negative.

With regard to Issue No. 2, the Crown is not a necessary party in a suit for malicious prosecution. My finding is in the negative.

My finding on issue No. 3 is that the information given by defendant No. 1 on 29th October and the evidence given by defendants implicating plaintiff was false and without reasonable and probable cause but not malicious. It is not the case of defendant No. 1 that he made a complaint to Sub-Inspector Sunderdas against plaintiff believing the information given by Gul Muhammad and Ali Muhammad and influenced by the fact that the surrounding circumstances indicated that members of the orthodox party had been the assailants and by the further fact that plaintiff had a mark on his face. This is not the defence. Both Sub-Inspector Sunderdas and defendant No. 1 deny that defendant No. 1 was informed of the statements of Gulam Muhammad and Ali Muhammad before his father's statement was recorded.

For the reasons which I have already set forth, my finding on issue No. 4 is in the negative.

Issue No. 5 does not arise, but in case my findings on the other issues are wrong, my finding on issue No. 5 is as follows:

Plaintiff undoubtedly suffered damage. He had to engage a Pleader to defend him. He is entitled to legitimate expenses incurred in defending himself: see Krishna v. Corporation of Calcutta (5). The alleged offence with which he was charged is punishable with seven years' rigorous imprisonment.

(5) 31 C. 406; 8 C. W. N. 329.

ment. The claim for Rs. 50 for the fees of Mr. Thadani is not pressed. The claim of Rs. 1,000 for the fees of Mr. Partabrai and of Rs. 50 or Rs. 60 for gharry hire and copies appear to me excessive.

In G. N. Gajapati v. Narasing (6) the High Court of Madras held that the expenses of Counsel did not constitute a proper element in damages in a suit for malicious prosecution. There was no necessity in the present suit for plaintiff to engage a Pleader whose fee was Rs. 1,000. I am of opinion that Rs. 250 as a Pleader's fee and Rs. 25 for out of pocket expenses would be reasonable. As regards the alleged loss in the karkhana no books have been produced, and losses due to the prosecution are not in my opinion proved. Plaintiff's case is that he spent Rs. 3,000 on the business and after four years recovered only Rs. 650 when he was forced to sell donkeys in order to pay lawyer's fees. The ordinary life of a cheap donkey however such as is required for plaintiff's business is only four or five years provided it is well fed. Spades, pick-axes, baskets, buckets and sieves are also subject to wear and tear. In addition to this there was no necessity for plaintiff in my opinion to spend Rs. 1,160 on lawyers and sundry expenses. There was no need for him, therefore, to have disposed of his donkeys and stock in the manner referred to by him.

With regard to the item "loss of earnings" the evidence shows that there were 10 or 12 hearings of the suit. In addition to this there would be the time spent in instructing his Pleader and a criminal prosecution is not conducive to the prosperous conduct of business. On the other hand the evidence shows that it was not the time of the year when there was much business.

A sum of Rs. 150 would in my opinion be a reasonable amount to allow for loss of earnings. Plaintiff does not press his claim for the cost of medical attendance for his mother. He has claimed Rs. 1,000 for pain of mind and reputation. The court in a suit for damages for malicious prosecution can take into consideration not only the injury to the reputation of the plaintiff but also the danger to liberty. The offence, the subject of the charge, was punishable with seven years' rigorous imprisonment. The claim of Rs. 1,000 in the circumstances does not appear unreasonable. The total damages, therefore, had the the plaintiff established the ingredients necessary to entitle him to damages for malicious prosecution would in my opinion be Rs. 1,425.

With regard to issue No. 6 my finding is in the negative. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 made an ambiguous and evasive reply in the written statement. The claim was not in my opinion false and vexatious. All the defendants in my opinion gave false evidence against plaintiff and defendant No. 1 in his statement on 29th October falsely implicated him. I dismiss the suit but in view of the conduct of the defendants, I make no order as to costs.

SIND JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

Miscellaneous Application No. 113 of 1929.

October 15, 1931.

MILNE, J. O. AND RUPCHAND, A. J. O.
FIRM OF KHEMCHAND RAMDAS—

APPLICANTS

COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX—OPPONENT.

Income-Tax Act (XI of 1922), s. 66 (3)—Refusal to state case on the ground that application is time-barred—High Court's power to order reference—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 45.

The power of the High Court under s. 66 (3), Income-Tax Act, to require the Commissioner to state a case is limited to a case of refusal on the ground of no question of law arising; the section cannot be construed as covering a refusal on some other grounds, such as that the application was barred by limitation. In re Madhavdas Jethabhai (2), followed. Kumar Sarat Kumar Roy v. Commissioner of Income-Tax (1), referred to. [p. 763, col. 1.]

[The serious inconvenience and failure of justice which is likely to arise in consequence of the powers under s. 45, Specific Relief Act, not being conferred upon the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind pointed out].

Mr. Kimatrai Bhojraj, for the Applicants.

Mr. C. M. Lobo, for the Opponent.

Rupchand, A. J. C.—This application purports to be an application under s. 66, cl. (3), Income-Tax Act, and is made under the following circumstances.

The applicant assessee received a letter by post on 9th November, 1928, intimating to him that an adverse order had been passed against him by the appellate Officer of Income-tax; that order was dated 7th November, 1928, and the intimation was issued from the Income Tax Officer on the following day. He made an application for a copy of the order on 22nd November, and received the copy on 10th December. He then made an application to the Commissioner of Income-Tax for a reference to this Court under s. 66 (2) and made the necessary deposit. The Commissioner rejected his application on the ground that it was made on 9th December, more than a month after the date on which the appellate order was passed and that it was, therefore, out of time. The assessee has now come to us with a prayer that the Commissioner be ordered to refer to us for our decision the questions of law arising out of the appellate order.

The application is opposed inter alia on the ground that it does not fall within the purview of cl. (3), s. 66, as that clause is limited in its scope to a refusal by the Commissioner to state the case on the only ground that no question of law arises out of the appellate order complained against.

Section 66 (2) of the Act was amended by Act I of 1930. It now provides for an application by the assessee to the Commissioner for a reference being made "within 60 days" of the date on which he is served "with notice" of the order complained against. Prior to the amendment the clause provided for a period of one month from "the passing of" the order complained against.

It is not seriously disputed that even according to that clause prior to its amendment the applicant's petition to the Commissioner was within time, as the period of one month should have been computed from the date of which intimation reached the assessee and not from the date when the order was signed, and that exemption for the period occupied by the assessee in obtaining a copy of the order should also have been allowed to him in view of the provisions of s. 29, Limitation Act. But it is suggested that cl. (2) had not received a judicial interpretation at the date of the order passed by the Commissioner and that he had made a bona fide error in holding that the application was barred by limitation; and it is urged that although the order passed by the Commissioner was wrong, we have no jurisdiction to review it or to compel a reference under the powers vested in us by cl. (3) of that section.

In the course of argument, a question was put to the learned Government Pleader whether in the event of the assessee withdrawing the present petition, the Commissioner would review his previous order and refer to us such questions in the appellate order as are questions of law, but he has intimated to us that the Commissioner would not be prepared to do so and wants a ruling on the preliminary objection raised by him.

However much I may be in sympathy with the applicant, I am afraid, I must decide this objection in favour of the Commissioner.

The point now in issue was first raised in Kumar Sarat Kumar Roy v. Commissioner of Income-Tax (1) but was left undecided.

This point again came up for decision before the Bombay High Court in In re Madhavdas Jethabhai (2). In that case their Lordships refused to entertain an application of this nature under s. 66 (3) and said:

"It seems to us impossible to construe sub-s. 3 in a way that would be directly contradictory to its express terms. The Legislature having chosen to limit sub-s. (3) to a case of refusal on the ground of any question of law arising, it would obviously be beyond our province to construe that section as covering a refusal on some other grounds, especially as another remedy is open to the applicant under s. 45, Specific Relief Act, as is shown, for instance, by the Privy Council case of Alcock Ashdown & Co. v. Chief Revenue Authority, Bombay (3)."

It would, therefore, appear that so far as the High Courts specified in s. 45, Specific Relief Act, are concerned, an assessee may, in befitting cases, obtain relief under that section although not under s. 66 (3), Income Tax Act. This court is not one of the courts specified under that section, and in view of the ruling in Indian Life Insurance Co., Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income Tax (4), a person who is assessed to income-tax by an Income Tax Officer in Sind cannot even ask the Bombay High Court to help him under that section.

The result, therefore, of our declining jurisdiction under s. 66 (3), Income Tax Act, in cases of this kind is that it might lead to injustice, the assessee in Sind being apparently left without a remedy.

It is urged, and not without some force, that it could never have been the intention of the Legislature to place assessee in this province in a less favourable position than those who are assessed by officers amenable to the jurisdiction of High Courts referred to in s. 45, Specific Relief Act, and to deprive them of their indubitable right to have questions of law arising out of orders of appellate officers of income-tax decided by a Court of Law merely and solely because the Commissioner refuses to state a case on certain fanciful and unfounded grounds. But my difficulty is that the clause in question is not capable of being extended so as to confer jurisdiction in matters other than those mentioned therein. It purports to confer summary jurisdiction in certain matters and in no others. It follows, therefore, that such summary jurisdiction cannot be extended to other matters. The clause does not purport to deal with the ordinary jurisdiction of the courts and if in the exercise of its ordinary jurisdiction this court cannot grant relief to an assessee resulting in inequity or injustice, it is for the Legislature to remedy the same either by extending the provisions of s. 45, Specific Relief Act, to this Court or by amending the provisions of s. 66 (3), Income Tax Act. Our functions are jus dicere and not jus dare, and it is not within our competence either to reform the clause according to the supposed intention of the Legislature or to make the law reasonable.

In another case, I had occasion to draw attention to the serious inconvenience and failure of justice which is likely to arise in consequence of the powers under s. 45, Specific Relief Act, not being conferred upon this Court, which is the highest Court of Justice in this province. There is no apparent reason why no court in or outside Sind should be vested with jurisdiction to compel public officers and public bodies in Sind to perform their duties, and I can only express a hope that this want of jurisdiction will be cured at an early date. As cl. (3) does not vest jurisdiction in us to deal with the present application, I have no other option but to dismiss it, but under the circumstances I would make no order as to costs.

Milne, J. C. — It is not contended before us that the application was time-barred as held by the Commissioner. It follows that the assessee has been deprived of the remedy to which by law he is entitled.

One would have expected the Income Tax Authorities in view of their mistake to allow the applicant his remedy. That would have been a fair and straightforward course. But the position taken by the authorities is that on purely technical grounds they cannot be compelled to render to the applicant the justice which is his due.

The question then is whether we can direct the Income Tax Commissioner that the application not being time barred a case should be stated thereon if the application involves any point of law. I agree with my learned brother Rupchand that we cannot do so. But I still hope that the Income-tax Authorities will take a reasonable view of the situation and consider the applicant's claim on the merits.

Divorce Petition No. 4 of 1930.

GLADYS BOURKE—PETITIONER

RICHARD EDMUND BOURKE—

RESPONDENT.

Divorce Act (IV of 1869), ss. 14, 16—Petition by wife for divorce—Wife guilty of adultery—Granting of divorce—Adultery caused by husband's cruelty—Discretion of Court.

In dealing with divorce cases where it is found that the woman has been guilty of adultery and that her adultery has resulted from the husband's conduct towards her, the court should make allowance in treating her case with leniency. Where the husband deserted his wife without making any provision for her maintenance and the wife who was living in her father's house after her desertion by the husband cohabited with a person living as a guest in the father's house:

Held, that as the conduct of the husband in deserting his wife and making no provision for her, conduced greatly to the wife's adultery it was a fit case in which the court should exercise its discretion by granting to the wife a decree nisi under the provisions of s. 14 of the Divorce Act. Pretty v. Pretty (5), relied on. Wyke v. Wyke (1), John v. Mary Anne (2), Burdon v. Burdon (4), Wilson De Roze v. Wilson De Roze (6), referred to. [p. 765, col. 2; p. 766, col. 1.]

Mr. Khemchand Gopaldas, for the Petitioner.

Judgment.—This is a petition for divorce by one Mrs Gladys Bourke, Christian, resident of Karachi, against Richard Edmund Bourke, Anglo-Indian Christian, formerly employed in Telegraph Department in Karachi, and now residing at Maymyo, Burma. The parties married on 25th September, 1912, and there were five children by the marriage. The parties were Christians by religion, and were domiciled in British India. The grounds alleged are cruelty and adultery.

The marriage certificate produced proves the alleged marriage and shows that the parties were domiciled in British India. The evidence on record shows that the parties were and are domiciled in British India. The respondent is now residing in Maymyo (Burma) and the summons in this matter was served on him there. The respondent has not appeared though duly served and the petitioner has filed affidavits in proof of her case.

F. J. Bernard, an employee in the Government Telegraph Office, in receipt of Rs. 325 a month, gives evidence of admissions by the respondent of misconduct with prostitutes and of cruelty by respondent to the petitioner. Respondent once followed the petitioner into the house of the witness who lived near them, picked up a curry stone and would have hit her had the witness not intervened. On another occasion respondent chased the petitioner to the witness' house with a bread knife in his hand and the witness had to prevent him from injuring her. Witness had seen respondent knocking at the door of the house occupied by Dondhin in the servants' quarters; Dondhin was a servant of the petitioner and respondent with whom it is alleged respondent committed adultery.

D. O'Donnel is also employed in the Government Telegraph Office; he came to live with the petitioner and her father in 1923 after her husband had deserted her; he was their paying guest. He made advances to the petitioner which she resisted for about 12 months; thereafter he used to cohabit with the petitioner unknown to her father but when her father came to know about this he left them in anger. Since then the petitioner has been living with him and he has had a second child by her; he is willing to marry the petitioner if she is granted dissolution of marriage.

P. Hanighan is the father of the petitioner. He gives evidence of respondent's cruelty to the petitioner. Respondent struck the petitioner with a lighted lamp; when the respondent deserted his wife, the petitioner came to stay with the witness but as he could not maintain her, he had to take O'Donnel as a paying guest. About 20 months thereafter he became aware of the petitioner's pregnancy and left them. About a year before the witness gave his evidence he obtained definite evidence that the respondent had been in the habit of committing adultery with prostitutes. He got this evidence from one Critchell.

The petitioner has given evidence of cruelty of the respondent; she suspected him of adultery with the servant Dondhin but she had no actual proof of it. She mentions the incidents of cruelty mentioned by the other witnesses. Her husband deserted her in 1923 without leaving any particulars of his whereabouts. She did not make the application before as she was ignorant of the law of divorce and had no means to take the proceedings.

T. P. Critchell a clerk in the office of Messrs. Ralli Bros., was a companion of the respondent. They used to visit houses of prostitutes together; respondent frequently committed adultery in those houses. He gives evidence that the respondent admitted to him that he was on intimate terms with a young Ayah who was his servant.

There is sufficient evidence then to prove cruelty and adultery. Two questions, however, remain to be considered. The first is the question of the delay in presenting this petition. But it appears that it is only recently that the petitioner had sufficiently definite information to prove adultery. In the circumstances then the delay may be excused.

The more serious question is the admitted adultery of the petitioner. Under proviso 1, s. 14, Divorce Act, the court is not bound to pronounce a decree nisi when it finds that the petitioner has during the marriage been guilty of adultery. It was held in Wyke v. Wyke (1), that the court must find as a fact that the petitioner's misconduct was caused directly by the matrimonial offence or offences of the respondent and in John v. Mary Anne (2) that there must be special circumstances attending the commission of adultery to justify the exercise of the court's discretion. In Constantinidi v. Constantinidi (3) the respondent committed adultery with a prostitute after his wife had left him with the co respondent: it was held that he was entitled to a decree nisi. In Burdon v. Burdon (4) the court granted a divorce to a wife guilty of adultery; it was held that the adultery had been conducted to by the cruelty, threats and misconduct of her husband.

The petitioner relies in particular on the case of Pretty v. Pretty (5) and Wilson De Roze v. Wilson De Roze (6). In the latter case the respondent treated his wife with great brutality and subsequently deserted her without making any provision for her maintenance or that of the surviving child of the marriage, and thereafter frequently visited brothels; the wife driven desperate by want, to maintain herself and her children, adopted the life of a prostitute and, having saved some money, gave up the said mode of livelihood, and then filed a petition for dissolution of her marriage: in the pleading as well as at the trial she did not conceal anything from the court; it was held that this was a fit case in which the court should exercise its discretion.

In the present case the petitioner was not a prostitute from want. In the case above quoted the petitioner had adopted the life of a prostitute only for such period as was necessary for her to raise the funds to institute divorce proceedings. In Pretty v. Pretty (5) it was held that the conduct of the husband had conduced to his wife's subsequent adultery; the court exercised its discretion in favour of the wife and allowed the decree to be made absolute notwithstanding the fact that at the time of the petition the petitioner had said nothing about her adultery and desertion. I quote a passage from the judgment:

"Some people think they must treat men and women on the same footing. But this court has not taken, and I hope will never take, that view. I trust that in dealing with these cases it will ever be remembered that the woman is the weaker vessel; that her habits of thought and feminine weakness are different from those of the man; and that what may perhaps be excusable in the case of the woman would not be excusable in the case of men. Where you find that the woman has been guilty of adultery and that her adultery has resulted from her husband's conduct towards her, this court does and I hope always will make allowance in treating her error with leniency."

The conduct of the husband in the case of Burdon v. Burdon (4) quoted above was perhaps more objectionable than the conduct of the husband in the present case. But bearing the above quotation in mind I must hold that the conduct of the husband in desiring his wife and making no provision for her did conduce greatly to the petitioner's adultery. The petitioner lived in the same house with a person who had been taken in as a paying guest. She was more exposed on that account to temptation and for that her husband was directly responsible. He deprived her of his support and countenance and left her in an exceedingly difficult position. It is true that after her father left the house she continued her adulterous association with the man O'Donnel, but she had then no choice; she had to maintain herself in some way and the continuance of the adulterous association was perhaps a less voluntary act than its original inception. I am, therefore, of the opinion that this is a case in which the court should exercise its discretion and subject to confirmation by the High Court grant a decree nisi under the provisions of s. 14, Divorce Act.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195 (1) (c)—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 477-A—Prosecution under s. 477-A—Necessity of sanction.

The provisions of s. 477-A, Penal Code, are not covered by the provisions of s. 195 (1) (c), Criminal Procedure Code, consequently, no sanction is required for institution of a prosecution under s. 477-A with regard to a document produced in Court. Teni Shah v. Bolahi Shah (1), not applied. [p. 767, cols. 1 & 2.]

Criminal Revision Application for revision of an order of the Special First Class Magistrate, Karachi.

Mr. Motiram Idanmal, for the Applicant.

Mr. Tarachand Khimandas, for the Opponent.

Mr. C. M. Lobo, Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Milne, J. C.—The complaint in this case was lodged against the accused under ss 465 and 477-A, Indian Penal Code. Process was issued under s. 477-A. It was alleged that accused was first a servant and subsequently became a partner of the complainant. It was accused's duty to write up the books of account. In Sambat 1985 accused was asked to complete the books. But instead of doing so he left the partnership. The complaint against him is that he falsified an entry in the firm's books relating to a deposit made by himself on the 13th of Akhar 1985, so as to make it appear that the deposit was made in the name of his brother-in-law Udernomal. The firm had suffered losses and if the deposit remained in the name of the accused he would not have been able to recover the money. The allegation is that he falsified the books to show that the deposit was made by his brother-in-law. His brother-in-law Udernomal sued the firm and recovered this deposit in addition to another deposit made by him. The accused was discharged by the learned Special First Class Magistrate, Karachi, and the complainant has now come to this Court in revision.

The complaint is based on three entries Exs. 2-B, 1-C and 1-D in the complainant's books relating to the deposits made by the accused, on the 13th of Akhar. The entry Ex. 2-B is made in the yadasht which does not appear to be a regular account book but simply a note book kept of entries to be made in the katcha rokar. The entry in the yadasht shows that the deposit of Rs. 200 was made by accused and so does the entry in the katcha rokar Ex. 1-C and in the pacca rokar Ex. 1-D. The entry in Ex. 1-D was however subsequently written over; the name of Udernomal being written over. This is a transaction which obviously requires explanation. The deposit which was originally shown as having been made by the accused was subsequently shown in the pacca rokar as a deposit made by Udernomal. The accused admits that he made this correction and the explanation given by him is that the deposit was really made by Udernomal—that complainant's brother Hemandas told him that Udernomal had asked for the amount and Hemandas had written to him promising to pay the amount; that when payment was made Udernomal said that the chit had been lost and the accused accordingly made the change at Hemandas' request so that Udernomal should not claim the amount a second time. But it would have been a simple matter for Hemandas to have taken a receipt from Udernomal clearly stating the facts of the transaction when the re-payment was made so that there could have been no possibility of Udernomal's producing the letter in support of a claim for any re-payment a second time. No reasonable ground has been urged why this simple ordinary procedure should not have been followed instead of making the false entry in the complainant's book, the purpose of which has not even now been clearly explained.

The learned Special First Class Magistrate has held that the allegations now made were not made when Udernomal sued in the Small Cause Court for the return of both the deposits. Exhibit 1-F is the written statement of the defendant

(now complainant) in the Small Cause Court suit. In para 3 he made allegations of bad faith against his partner Partabrai. He did not specifically allege the falsification of accounts—the subject of the present complaint. The finding in the Small Cause Court suit was that both the deposits were made by Udernomal. The learned Magistrate was of opinion that the court was precluded from trying the same question again. But even if complainant was lax in his conduct of the case in the Small Cause Court, if as matter of fact there had been falsification of the accounts, it is still open to him to lodge a criminal complaint on the facts alleged. It may be a difficulty in his case but he did not raise that contention in the civil proceedings. But so far as the present complaint is concerned, there are plain alterations in the complainant's books of account which the accused admits were made by him, which show that a certain deposit was first shown as made by the accused and the entry was subsequently altered to show the deposit was made by Udernomal, his brother-in-law; no reasonable explanation has been given why this change in the account was made and the accused should not have been discharged until the Magistrate had had before him some satisfactory explanation of the change in the accounts. It may be noted that the explanation given by the accused in his statement to the Court was not put to the witness Hemandas; it was the accused's case that the change was made under instructions from Hemandas.

A further point has been taken that the sanction of the Small Cause Court is required for this prosecution. The Small Cause Court suit was a suit against the firm in which, according to the complaint accused is a partner. Accused was examined as a witness in the case and produced the entries complained of. The opponent relies on Teni Shah vs. Bolahi Shah (1), in which it was held that s. 463, Indian Penal Code, referred to in s. 195 (1) (c) of the Criminal Procedure Code covers forgery of the description for which a penalty is provided under s. 467 of the Indian Penal Code. Applicant contends in the first place that opponent was not a party to the suit; he was not served as a party; nor did he appear as a party. But without going into this question I would hold that the provisions of s. 477-A are not covered by the provisions of s. 195 (1) (c). Section 195 (1) (c) refers in the first place to offences punishable under s. 463 (forgery) and that would no doubt include the various offences of which forgery was an element. The definition of forgery is given in s. 463 and would cover the various sections in which the word forgery is used. But s. 477-A does not contain any reference to forgery. It contains its own definition of the offences enacted therein and the ruling Teni Shah v. Bolahi Shah (1) would therefore not apply.

I hold therefore that the accused has given no reasonable explanation of the admittedly false entries in the complainant's books which he admits have been made by him. I am of opinion that he was improperly discharged and I therefore direct the District Magistrate by himself or by any Magistrate subordinate to him (I would suggest a Magistrate other than the Magistrate who has tried the case) to make further enquiry into complaint against the accused.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 203—Statement on oath of complainant—Whether and when necessary—Complainant already examined under s. 200.

A Magistrate is not bound to examine the complainant on oath under s. 203, Criminal Procedure Code, when he has already been examined on oath under s. 200, unless the Magistrate considers it desirable to do so. Where the witnesses examined on behalf of the complainant have said nothing which requires any further explanation from the complainant, he need not be examined again under s. 203. In re Ningappa (1), discussed.

Application for revision of an order of the Additional City Magistrate, Karachi.

Mr. P. K. Vaswani, for the Applicant.

Mr. Ramchand Jethmal, for the Opponent.

Mr. C. M. Lobo, Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Milne, J. C.—This is a complaint filed under s. 420, Indian Penal Code, by the applicant against one Mrs. Booth who had purchased certain goods from the applicant. The applicant held six pro-notes executed by the accused. The accused had been pressing for a further loan of Rs. 400 to which the applicant agreed provided that her husband joined in the execution of the pro-note for the entire amount of Rs. 1,300 including the previous advances. The accused agreed to this. The complainant went to her house. The accused showed him a pro note which she said was signed by her husband and asked the complainant to hand over the previous pro-notes. The applicant insisted on the accused also signing the pro-note. He then delivered to the accused the six previous pro notes and paid her the sum of Rs. 400. The accused and her husband subsequently denied the execution of the pro-note. They repeated their denial through their Pleaders when called upon by the applicant's Pleader to pay the amount.

(1) 5 Ind. Cas. 879; 14 C. W. N. 479; 11 Cr. L. J. 380.

The complainant was examined; he verified his complaint. A preliminary inquiry was held by the Magistrate who examined the complainant's witnesses who did not give any evidence in support of the charge, and the complaint was dismissed under s. 203 as there was no evidence to prove that the accused had committed any criminal offence.

The ground which the applicant has taken in this Court is one of law. It is his proposition that he should have been examined on oath under s. 203 in addition to his examination under s. 200 before his complaint could be dismissed. For this proposition he relies on the case of In re Ningappa (1). There Macleod, O. J. refers to the Magistrate as being bound to examine the complainant under s. 203, but it appears from the judgment of Shah, J. that the complainant was not examined at all in that case.

The complainant has been examined in this case, and it appears from the use of the words "if any" in s. 203 that there is no necessity for the Magistrate to examine the complainant and on oath under that section unless he considers it desirable to do so.

We therefore dismiss this application.

Rupchand, A. J. C.—The learned Counsel has argued that the learned Magistrate should not only have examined the complainant on oath at the time the complaint was presented by him as required by s. 200, but that he should have examined him further after he had recorded the evidence of the witnesses cited by the complainant. In support of his argument he has urged that the expression "Statement on oath" in s. 203 is something different from the examination on oath of the complainant under s. 200 of the Code. He has however lost sight of the words "if any" in s. 203, Criminal Procedure Code.

These words clearly show that there need not be any examination on oath by the complainant other than that provided by s. 200.

In In re Ningappa Rayappa (1), the complaint had been referred by the Magistrate to the Police for investigation, and it is not clear either from the Editorial note or from the judgment of the learned Chief Justice if the Magistrate had examined the complainant on oath as required by s. 200 before he sent the papers to the Police for investigation. It is true that the learned Chief Justice has said:

"The Magistrate without examining the complainant, as he was bound to do under s. 203, Criminal Procedure Code, dismissed the complaint."

But it is possible that reference to s. 203 in the above passage is a mistake for s. 200, because in his concurring judgment Shah, J. has said:

"The order dismissing it under s. 203, Criminal Procedure Code, is clearly wrong as the complainant was not examined at all."

As the complainant had not been examined at all, there was no occasion for their Lordships to decide if it was incumbent on the Magistrate to examine the complainant a second time.

I can quite conceive of cases where something might transpire in the course of the evidence of complainant's witnesses which requires an explanation, and in that case it might perhaps be arguable that the Magistrate should have examined the complainant further, in order to enable him to explain what was said by the witnesses. But there is no such allegation in the present case as the witnesses who were examined on behalf of the complainant have said nothing which requires any further explanation from the complainant.

There is therefore no substance in this argument, and I accordingly concur with the learned Judicial Commissioner that this application should be dismissed.

Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act (II of 1927), s. 78—Ex parte order for delivery—Objection by aggrieved party—Power of Court to reconsider its order—Inherent powers.

Where an order is passed ex parte by the Court under s. 78 of the Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act, 1927, directing delivery of some trust property and it is objected to by a person who is prejudicially affected thereby, the Court can reconsider the ex parte order, inasmuch as such an order carries with it an implication that it will be subject to any objections to which the act of delivery may give rise. [p. 771, col. 1.]

In a proceeding under s. 78 of the said Act the Court acts not merely administratively but judicially, and on cause being shown, may refuse to enforce the Board's order. National Telephone Company Limited v. Postmaster-General (1), Painter v. Liverpool Gas Co. (2), Harper v. Carr (3), Krishnasami Pani Kondan v. Ramasami Chettiar (4), *Debi Bakhsh Singh v. Petition under s. 114 of Act V of 1908 and s. 107 of the Government of India Act praying the High Court to revise an order of the District Court, South Arcot, dated the 16th April, 1930 and made in M. P. No. 173 of 1927 in O. A. No. 79 of 1926 on the file of the Board of Commissioners for the Hindu Religious Endowments, Madras.

Mr. T. V. Ramanatha Ayyar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. S. T. Srinivasagopalachari, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The following table shows how the parties whose names occur in these proceedings are connected:

Subramania Ayyar died in 1899 leaving a will bequeathing the land now in dispute to his nephew Venkataramana Ayyar. By a codicil he gave his widow Sivakami a life-interest in it. Another bequest was of a sum of money to form a trust fund, of which Sivakami was during her life-time the self-constituted trustee. The widow survived Venkataramana Ayyar, and she too made a will, and in it she declared that Venkataramana Ayyar had told her, before his death, that she might include the land in the trust already created. After her death in 1924, on the strength of the allegation in this will that the property was trust property, Venkataramana Ayyar's sister Guruvammal applied to the Religious Endowments Board for an order under s. 42 of the Act (II of 1927) appointing her to discharge the duties of the trustee, and under s. 77, for an order allocating the income of the endowment between religious and charitable purposes. The Board passed orders accordingly. The order appointing Guruvammal was challenged a little later by Sivakami's brother's widow and her sons, on the ground that Sivakami had nominated them as trustees in her will; but the order already passed in Guruvammal's favour was substantially confirmed. This lady then proceeded to apply to the District Court, under s. 78 of the Act, to be put in possession of the trust property. In her application she named a number of respondents, among them being Sivakami's brother's widow and her sons, who had contested her appointment before the Board, and one Arumugam Padayachi, said to be the lessee of the property now in dispute. The learned District Judge ordered notice to the respondents, but no notice was issued, because he subsequently acceded to a representation of the petitioner's Vakil that no notice was necessary. Ex parte orders were accordingly passed directing delivery, symbolical in the case of the property now in question, which was in the occupation of a tenant.

Then arose opposition from another quarter. Matters had proceeded so far on the footing that the property was trust property. Venkataramana Ayyar's widow and her alleged adopted son disputed this, denying that Sivakami had received from Venkataramana Ayyar any such permission as her will alleged to treat the property as trust property. These persons claimed the land as their own, and not unnaturally complained that the proceedings before the Board and the District Court had taken place behind their backs. They accordingly asked the District Judge to set his previous order aside and dismiss Guruvammal's application. The matter came before the successor to the learned District Judge who had passed the previous order. He has treated the application as sustainable upon the analogy of O. XXI, r. 100 of the Civil Procedure Code, and has posted the case for evidence. Against this order Guruvammal has preferred this Civil Revision Petition, and the point for decision is whether the District Judge was right in re-opening the matter.

Now it is in the first place apparent that neither the order of the Board appointing Guruvammal, nor the order of the District Court directing delivery to her, is binding upon the respondents, who were no parties to these orders. The respondents' learned Advocate would go further and criticise both orders as improper, the Board's, because it did not satisfy itself that the property was in fact a religious endowment, the District Court's, because it failed to exercise judicially the discretion vested in it by s. 78. As the Board's order is not under direct attack, I do not propose to examine its jurisdiction to pass such an order. As regards the order of the learned District Judge, s. 78 lays down that the Court may order delivery to a person producing the Board's order of appointment when such person "is resisted in, or prevented from, obtaining possession." It is unfortunate, I think, that the learned District Judge was prevailed upon to pass his order without notice to any of the respondents named in the application. The section appears to me to give the Court the opportunity of deciding upon the merits of the resistance which, in order to get such an order, the applicant has to allege. This is conceded on behalf of the petitioner here, the Court acts not merely administratively but judicially, and on cause being shown may refuse to enforce the Board's order. Such a position was in fact impliedly conceded by the presence of an array of respondents in the application. It is noteworthy, however, that the names of the present respondents were conspicuous by their absence, and I cannot absolve the petitioner from attempting to get possession of the property without raising the eminently disputable question of the allegation of entrustment contained in Sivakami's will. Although these persons were ignored, however, included among the respondents was Arumugam Padayachi, whom they claim as their own tenant, and it seems probable that had notice gone to him the question of title might still have been brought up for inquiry.

The question then is, an order having been passed in these circumstances, whether the Court has jurisdiction to re-open it and adjudicate upon the respondents' claims. There are no doubt technical difficulties in the way of holding that O. XXI, r. 100, Civil Procedure Code, will operate proprio vigore, nor does the learned District Judge invoke it otherwise than by analogy. His Court is charged with the duty of executing the Board's orders and if an order in execution results in the dispossession of a third party, it should be within his competence to investigate the matter and pass such orders as may appear appropriate. When a duty of a particular character is cast upon an established Court it imports, in the words of Lord Haldane, L.O., in National Telephone Company Limited v. Postmaster-General (1), 'that the ordinary incidents of the procedure of that Court are to attach.' But I think his right to take such a course may, at least in the circumstances of the present case, be put upon still broader grounds. I take it that the applicant should have made the respondents parties to her application, and that the District Judge should have issued notice to them. There is ample authority for the view that an order passed in the absence of such preliminaries is voidable or void as against them. In Painter v. Liverpool Gas Co. (2), it was held that a distress warrant issued without notice was illegal, Lord Denman, C. J., referring to Harper v. Carr (3), where Lord Kenyon said, 'It is an essential rule in the administration of Justice that no man shall be punished without being heard in his defence; the party must be summoned before a warrant of distress is granted...; and on that summons many circumstances may appear to show that a warrant of distress ought not to be granted.'

In Krishnasami Panikondar v. Ramasami Chettiar (4), the Privy Council had to consider the effect of an order passed ex parte excusing the delay in presenting an appeal, and decided that it was open to the respondent to obtain a reconsideration of the order. 'It must therefore in common fairness be regarded as a tacit term of an order like the present that though unqualified in expression it should be open to reconsideration at the instance of the party prejudicially affected.' So here we may, I think, read into the District Judge's ex parte order the implication that it will be subject to any objections to which the act of delivery may give rise. Another Privy Council case which declares the inherent power of the Court to rectify a mistake inadvertently made is Debi Bakhsh Singh v. Habib Shah (5). I do not think that it will do for the Court to refuse to take such a course on the ground that the party damnified may recover his legal rights by suit. As was laid in Syud Tuffuzzool Hossein Khan v. Raghunath Pershad (6), it is the duty of the Court to give redress. I think accordingly that the learned District Judge has acted rightly in entertaining the respondents' application, and I dismiss the Civil Revision Petition with costs.

Messrs. S. Varadachariar and A. Swaminatha Aiyar for the Respondent.

Judgment.—These are appeals under s. 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure against the orders of the Subordinate Judge of Negapatam in E. A. Nos. 11 and 84 of 1930 in O. S. No. 125 of 1921 which was a suit filed for the framing of a scheme for the temple of Sri Thiagarajaswami at Tiruvarur in East Tanjore District. The matter came up to the High Court before Spencer, J. and myself and a scheme was framed. Under cl. (8) of the scheme the trustee of each Kattalai was directed to submit a budget to the treasurer of his expected receipts and expenditure and the treasurer was directed to consolidate the budgets of all the Kattalais and place them before the Board for their approval and orders. Under cl. (13) of the scheme the trustees of the respective Kattalais were directed to hand over all the cash proceeds of their property to their treasurer who had to keep them in a safe within the temple premises, enter them in a book to be kept with separate pages for each Kattalai for that purpose and furnish the trustees with receipts for the same and be responsible for their safe custody, and the treasurer was directed to put the trustees in funds from the amounts in his hands to their respective credits whenever they apply for disbursements according to the budget. In pursuance of the scheme, the President of the Board of Control insisted on the trustees of the Kattalais sending complete budgets of receipts and expenditure and on their failing to do so he applied for attachment of their property or their arrest. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the petition. There was an appeal to the High Court. That appeal came on before this Bench and it was held on an objection that the decree in the original suit was not an executable one, that the directions in cls. (8) and (13) of the scheme were executable and not merely declaratory. Our judgment was reported as Ramanatham Chettiar v. Balayee Ammal (1). The present application is by the Board of Control acting through their President for the appointment of a Receiver for the properties under the control of 12th defendant who is the trustee of Abisheka and Annadhana Kattalais for the purpose of carrying out the duties which the trustees have to perform under cls. (8), (13) and (16) of the scheme, alleging default on the part of the trustees in regard to their duties. The petitions were actually pressed before the Subordinate Judge in respect of only cl. (13). The complaint made against the trustee is that he had persistently not been making remittances nor sending accounts showing collections from Fasli 1338 downwards. The Subordinate Judge found that the appellant was guilty of continuous and persistent defiance not only of the directions in the scheme to make remittances of money collections but also the orders of Court made from time to time and that he paid only a small portion of the money received by him. In para. 6 of the judgment there is a table showing the actual income and remittances to the treasurer. The appellant admitted on 2nd September, 1929, that he received a sum of nearly Rs. 5,000 between 29th March and 23rd August, 1929, but did not remit it to the treasurer and spent it himself. Other defaults are mentioned by the Subordinate Judge in the same paragraph. Similar complaints were made in 1928 and also in 1929. Nothing further was done on the ground that an undertaking was given by him (vide Exs. E and E-1). In the present petition he was required to produce all the accounts. He has not done so. The Board of Control made a rule that he should send monthly budgets, but this was not done. Accordingly the Subordinate Judge appointed a Receiver. It is against this order that the present appeals are filed.

In appeal the point strenuously pressed is that the appointment of a Receiver is not a proper remedy, on various technical grounds. First, it is argued that the Board of Control was not a party to the decree itself and could not be a party; therefore, it cannot be a decree-holder and cannot execute the decree. The reply to this argument is that a decree-holder need not be a party to the decree. It is enough if the decree confers some right enforceable under the decree upon some persons mentioned in it. The right of calling upon the trustees to remit the collections is conferred upon the Board of Control. The Board may therefore, be regarded as a decree-holder. Vide Varadaiah Chetti v. Narasimhulu Chetti (2) and cases cited therein. The decision in Sivaram Dubai v. Rajagopala Misra (3), does not help the appellant as it did not relate to matter in execution. We have already held in Ramanatham Chettiar v. Balayee Ammal (1), that these clauses of the scheme may be regarded as executable. The decision in Ranganatha Thathachariar v. Krishnaswami Thathachariar (4) and Veerappa v. Padmanabha (5) are distinguishable as the applications in those cases related not to matters in execution but to other matters.

It is then argued that the proper method of compelling the trustee of Annadhana and Abisheka Kattalais to obey the directions in the scheme is by attaching the property or arresting him and not appointing a Receiver. It may be that attachment of property and arrest of the judgment-debtor are two modes of enforcing obedience by the judgment-debtor to the directions in the decree. But in the present case the object of the application is not only to compel obedience on the part of the judgment debtor but also to obtain the collections made on behalf of the Kattalais, and to ensure the production of accounts as regards collections. The learned Advocate for the appellant argued that the appointment of a Receiver is a mode of equitable execution under the English Law and referred to English authorities to show that it cannot be justified in circumstances like these. We have nothing to do with those authorities. Even in England a wider discretion is conferred upon Courts by the Judicature Act but in practice even under the Judicature Act the Court would appoint Receivers only in cases where these could have been appointed prior to the Act. But under the Civil Procedure Code we are not restricted by considerations of this kind. According to s. 51 Civil Procedure Code, one of the modes of obtaining execution is by the appointment of a Receiver and under O. XL, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code, a Receiver can be appointed wherever it is just and convenient, and it is provided that a Receiver shall not be appointed so as "to remove from the possession or custody of property any person whom any party to the suit has not a present right so to remove." This proviso clearly refers to a case where the person in possession is a third party and the parties to the suit have no present right to disturb him. This was the view taken by Sadasiva Aiyar, J, in Kumaraswami Pillai v Pasupathia Pillai (6). We agree with that view. Where the dispute is between parties to the suit, if it is just and convenient for the purpose of enforcing or carrying out the directions in the decree we think a Receiver can be appointed even where the party in possession is not liable to be removed. It is true that in the present case the Board of Control has no right to remove the trustees. Their petition was not for the purpose of removing the trustees but for the purpose of compelling them to carry out the duties according to the scheme. This has been held to be intra vires in Veeraraghavachariar v. Advocate-General Madras (7). The effect of the present order of the Subordinate Judge is not the removal of the trustee. Defendant No. 12, who is the trustee of Annadhanam and Abishekam Kattalais, will continue to discharge his duties as trustee in all other matters untouched by this order. He will settle the budgets, obtain disbursements from the treasurer and incur the expenditure necessary for the carrying out of the Kattalais. Only in the matter of collecting the income and remitting the cash collections to the treasurer a Receiver is appointed to attend to these duties. As will appear lower down this order must necessarily be of a temporary character and does not amount to a permanent dispossession of the trustee. In a suit brought by a mortgagee against a mortgagor for the purpose of obtaining a mortgage amount where the property belongs to a mutt and a sae is considered not desirable, a Receiver was appointed for the purpose of collecting the income of the mortgag property and paying the amount due to the mortgagee.

Vibhudapriya v. Lakshmindra (8). A similar order was passed in Niladri Sahu v. Mahant Chaturbhuj Das (9). We do not see therefore any objection to the appointment of a Receiver in this case for the purpose of ensuring remittances of the collections from the properties of the two Kattalais to the Board of Control. On the merits we do not see any reason why we should disturb the order of the Subordinate Judge having regard to the persistent conduct of the trustee in question.

As I have observed, it is not desirable that a Receiver should be appointed permanently. There should be some time-limit; otherwise the Court will have perpetually to superintend the affairs of the Kattalais. In the first instance we may limit the period to two years. If the Subordinate Judge is satisfied at the end of this period with the conduct of the trustees, or if the present trustee is removed, after his removal, the Receiver may be discharged, or the term of the Receiver may be extended from time to time.

Subject to this modification the appeals are dismissed with costs.

T. B. VARADARAJA AYYAR—
RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Widow—Decree against widow, when binding on reversioner—Tests—Frame of suit—Consent to payment of decree amount, whether amounts to acknowledgment that it is binding on estate.

Where a decree is obtained against a limited owner such as a Hindu widow whether or not the debt was binding on the estate during the life-time of the limited owner, the decree-holder can proceed against her interest in the property. Therefore, consent by the reversioners to a stipulation reserving an amount for payment to the holder of a decree against a limited owner does not amount to an acknowledgment that the debt is binding not only upon the limited owner's interest but also upon the reversioners. [p. 774, cols. 1 & 2.]

In order to construe a suit against a widow as a representative suit, some indication however slight, must be found to show that the creditor intended so to frame it and unless such indications are present and if the suit is in form only a simple money claim against the widow although in point of fact the debt may have been contracted for necessary purposes the reversionary interest could not be held to be bound by the decree against her. Appeal against an order of the Small Cause Court Judge, Kumbakonam, dated the 18th March 1929, in A. S. No. 80 of 1928.

Messrs. S. Panchapagesa Sastri and K. R. Krishnaswami Ayyar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. M. S. Venkatarama Aiyar and V. Srinivasa Aiyar, for the Respondent.

Judgment—This appeal is against an order bringing the appellant on record in O. S. No. 343 of 1923 on the file of the District Munsif's Court of Mannargudi as the legal representative of the judgment-debtor, a woman named Vedathammal. The respondent is the decree-holder and he obtained a money-decree against Vedathammal and attached a house in which she enjoyed a limited estate. While it was under attachment she and her father as next reversioner joined in selling it under Ex. D. to the appellant. The latter filed a claim petition during the pendency of which the judgment-debtor died. Subsequently the appellant obtained another sale-deed from the same reversioner. The question is whether as purchaser of the property he can be brought on as her legal representative.

The learned District Munsif considers that the decree in O. S. No. 343 of 1923 may be construed as against Vedathammal in her representative capacity and not merely against her personally. The lower Appellate Court has differed from this view, but considers that the appellant is estopped by certain conduct from contesting his liability for the decree. I will deal with this latter point first. The learned Judge of the Court of Small Causes has disposed of it very briefly in para. 13 of his judgment and has not given with any clearness the reasons which support the view he takes. But the fact he apparently relies upon is that under Ex. D a sum of money was reserved to pay the decree holder if the decree was eventually confirmed on appeal. The inference drawn from this argument, that the reversioner thereby acknowledged that the debt was of such a character as to be binding upon the reversion, appears to me wholly to misconceive the position. Whether or not the debt was so binding, during the life time of the limited owner, the decree-holder could proceed against her interest in the property, and so long as she lived the purchaser held it subject to this risk. It was perfectly reasonable therefore that he should only buy it on the condition that so much of the purchase-money as was necessary should be reserved for payment of the debt in case of need, and it is clear that a stipulation to this effect involved no acknowledgment that the debt was binding not only upon the limited owner's interest, but also upon the reversionary interest. No question of estoppel therefore arises.

The next question is whether the suit was so framed as to enable the decree-holder to proceed against the absolute interest now enjoyed by the appellant as the reversioner's representative. The suit was against the limited owner only; it was a simple money claim upon a debt, and no issue was raised as to whether the debt was binding on the estate. Can the decree-holder show in execution of such a decree that the debt was in fact binding so that he may bring on the appellant as representative of the reversionary interest and proceed against the property in his hands? There is no doubt that the answer to this question depends upon the view taken of the frame of the suit, whether it may be construed as aimed at the whole estate by virtue of the binding character of the debt or whether the plaintiffs did not look beyond the interest of the limited owner. There is a quantity of case law upon this subject. In one line of cases, of which Nugender Chander Ghose v. Kaminee Dossee (1) Bai Jun Doobey v. Brij Bhookun Lall Anusti (2), Deendyal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh (3) and Lalita Mohan Pal v. Dayamoyi Roy (4) may be cited as examples, the principle is stressed that it is incumbent upon the plaintiff so to frame his suit as to make it clear that he asks for a decree against the whole interest. In the case last cited above, the Privy Council quote with approval a passage in the judgment of the High Court of Calcutta to the effect that in order to make the estate liable a creditor must frame his suit in the proper manner, whereas in the instance then under consideration all that he asked and the Court granted was a personal decree against the debtor. There was no indication that the debtor was a party to the suit as representative of the estate. Another line of cases, while conceding that the actual frame of the suit is an important factor in the decision, take also other facts into consideration in attempting to arrive at the plaintiff's intention.

Instances of cases in which the frame of the suit was not regarded as decisive are Jugul Kishore v. Jotendro Mohun Tagore (5), Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun (6), Simbhunath Pande v. Golap Singh (7), Radha Kissen v. Nauratan Lall (8) and Veerabadra Aiyar v. Marudaga Nachiar (9). The judgment in Devji v. Sambu (10) has been cited as another decision on the same lines, but I do not think that the facts were really analogous, because the case was one of a mortgage executed by a mother who had minor sons, and the only way in which the creditor could have got any title at all was by virtue of an intention that the estate should be bound. So far as this Court is concerned it is unnecessary for me to look further than to the judgment in Veerabada Aiyar v. Marudaga Nachiar (9), which passes a number of previous decisions in review. The stage at which the question arose there was after sale. But some of the tests applied will serve equally in the present circumstances.

"In investigating this question," the learned Judges say, "the Court is not confined to any one fact. The sale certificate is no doubt the most important document as the instrument conferring title, but is not conclusive. The frame of the suit, the judgment, the decree, the execution proceedings, the advertisements for sale, the adequacy or inadequacy of the purchase-money and the conduct of the parties are all circumstances which may legitimately be considered in an inquiry of this nature."

Of course in the present case we can only consider the frame of the suit, the judgment and the decree; and I think it is clear from the observations quoted above that in order to construe it as a representative suit some indication, however slight, must be found to show that the creditor intended so to frame it. In the case under reference, the learned Judges look for and succeed in finding such indications. No other case that I have seen goes further in placing a liberal construction upon the creditor's intentions, and I think therefore that it may safely be said that, unless such indications can be pointed to, and if the suit is in form only a simple money claim against the limited owner, although in point of fact the debt may have been contracted for necessary purposes, it would be going beyond any reported decision to hold that the reversionary interest could be bound. This has been clearly and as a summary of the case law I think correctly, stated by Mayne (Edn. 9, page. 641), where speaking of a female heir, he says:

"Where the suit is founded upon a purely personal debt or contract of her own, the decree can only be against her own person and property, and a sale in execution will only convey her own interest in the property. But even though the foundation of the decree be a liability which might bind reversioners, that alone is not sufficient. The suit must be so framed as to show that it is not merely a personal demand upon the female in possession, but that it is intended to bind the entire estate, and the interests of all those who come after her. The reason of this is that, although in a suit brought to recover, or charge an estate of which a Hindu female is the proprietress she will, as defendant, represent and protect the estate, as well in respect of her own as of the reversionary interest; still and on this very account, the plaintiff is bound to give notice that he is seeking so large a remedy, in order to put those who may be ultimately affected upon their guard, to enable them to protect themselves."

Turning now to the facts of the present case, there is only one recital in the plaint which can by any stretch of construction be interpreted as a reference to the binding character of the debt. The promissory note upon which the suit was brought recited purposes to which the money was to be applied, which no doubt would be binding upon the reversioner; and this passage in the plaint refers to the promissory note the value of which "as per details in cash" the defendant is alleged to have received. The learned District Munsif has accepted his reference to the contents of the promissory note as a sufficient expression of the plaintiff's intention to proceed against the absolute estate.

"by stating that the loan under the pro-note sued on was borrowed by the defendant as per detail set out in the pro-note."

The learned Judge of the Court of Small Causes is unable to follow him in this and however much the decree holder's claim may enlist one's sympathy I think that even if we had no external help to the construction of the plaint, it would be impossible to hold that the required intention was disclosed by this passage. There is however a piece of evidence which seems to me to destroy any presumption upon this point. The respondent has admitted that at the time the money was borrowed he believed that Vadathammal enjoyed an absolute interest in the property, and so far as appears he was under this misapprehension even when he filed the plaint. That being so I do not see how it is possible to hold that he framed or intended to frame the suit in the manner required to bind ulterior interests in the property. The argument has been advanced that although he may have been under this misapprehension, the suit did in fact contemplate the liability of the whole property and so the necessary condition was fulfilled. I am unable to agree. In a suit framed on the supposition that the estate was not limited it was not even necessary to assert the binding character of the debt and the suit was purely one for a personal decree for the money against the debtor. When the suit was so indisputably of this character it is certainly idle to look for any indications of the creditor's intention to frame it in such a way as would be appropriate in the case of a debt contracted by a limited owner and binding on the whole estate. And I think it would be going beyond any reported decision to hold that a suit brought in such circumstances may be deemed to be so framed as to enable the reversionary interest to be proceeded against. I cannot accordingly find that the appellant is representative of any interest bound by the decree and I must allow the appeal, set aside the lower Court's orders and dismiss the application with costs throughout.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 202—Interest, meaning of—Junior member of tarwad, interest of, in tarwad property—Malabar Law.

A junior member of the tarwad who has been given a power-of-attorney by the karnavan to collect rents of the tarwad property being entitled to be maintained out of such property, has an interest in the property within the meaning of s. 202, Contract Act.

Petition under s. 25 of Act IX of 1867, praying the High Court to revise the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Cannanore, dated the 2nd March 1928, in S. O. S. No. 1304 of 1927.

Mr. O. T. G. Nambiar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. C. Sridharan, for the Respondents.

Judgment—The petitioner brought a suit to recover rents from defendants Nos. 1 to 3 who had attorned to him under a marupat. The plaintiff is the karnavan of the tarwad. The 5th defendant is a junior member to whom the plaintiff had given a power-of-attorney to collect the rents. The plaintiff says that he had revoked this power-of-attorney on 22nd September 1927 and that the payment of rent made by the defendants in December 1927 to 5th defendant was consequently invalid. Two pleas were raised in defence that the defendant had mortgaged the property to D. W. No. 1 with instructions to pay the rent to the 5th defendant and that D. W. No. 1 was not aware of the cancellation. The second is that the cancellation itself was illegal. I have not considered it necessary to call on the respondents to answer the first point because on the second I think the decision is correct.

The petitioner contends that the cancellation is valid, that if it was made before the time fixed in the power-of-attorney for its termination the only remedy is one by way of damages under s. 205 of the Indian Contract Act and that the 5th defendant had no interest in the property as described in s. 202. The question therefore is whether the 5th defendant had any such interest in the property as is contemplated under s. 202. The 5th defendant is a member of the tarwad and entitled to be maintained out of the tarwad property. The rents are part of the tarwad property and he in my opinion has a clear interest in the rents before and after the grant to him of the power-of-attorney. Under s. 202, Pollock and Mulla state with regard to 'authority coupled with interest' that in England the word 'coupled' implies beyond the mere fact of the agent having an interest in the subject-matter, some specific connection between the authority and the interest. They quote from Smart v. Sandars (1) as follows.—

"We think this doctrine—i.e., the rule of the present section—applies only to cases where the authority is given for the purpose of being a security, or as part of the security, not to cases where the authority is given independently, and the interest of the donee of the authority arises afterwards, and incidentally only, as, for instance, in the present case goods are consigned to a factor for sale. This confers an implied authority to sell. Afterwards the factor makes advances. This is not an authority coupled with an interest but an independent authority, and an interest subsequently arising."

(1) (1848) 5 C. B. 895 at p. 917; 17 L. J. O. P. 258

It appears to me from this that in English Law if the interest was previous to the authority, it would be such an interest as is contemplated in s. 202. Under the heading 'Indian authorities' at page 675 the cases quoted are ones where the agent had no interest antecedent to the authority.

I must hold in the present case that the 5th defendant (agent) had an interest in the property namely the rents due to the tarwad and that the cancellation of his authority was illegal, the conditions of such cancellation not having been complied with as pointed out by the lower Court.

The petition fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Messrs. B. Sitarama Rao, B. Pocker and P. S. Narayanaswami Ayyar, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The Civil Revision Petition is filed by the 19th defendant, a Receiver in a pending mortgage suit, against the finding of the Subordinate Judge under the 20th issue, 'whether the suit is bad for want of notice under s. 80, Civil Procedure Code.' The contention is, of course, that the Receiver is a public officer, and that has not been disputed before me. But the point in issue is whether the suit is against him "in respect of any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity." I think it is clear that those words refer to a past act and not to any action merely contemplated or threatened. This has been held by a Bench of this Court in Arunachalam Chetty v. David (1), which was a suit for a perpetual injunction restraining an Official Receiver from selling certain property which vested in him in insolvency. I am asked to hold that the later Privy Council case, Bhagchand Dagadas v. Secretary of State for India (2), renders that decision no longer good law. But I cannot find that their Lordships have held anything more than that s. 80 will apply to any kind of suit, whatever the relief sought, including a suit for an injunction. But, of course, it may very well be that a suit for an injunction may be based upon past acts, and not merely upon an apprehension of future action. That in fact was the case there, because the relief asked for was in the first place a declaration that certain official notices and orders were ultra vires and invalid and, secondly, for an injunction permanently restraining all executive action thereunder. Their Lordships expressly say that unless the right to the first relief was made out, the prayer for the second necessarily failed, and it is apparent that the first relief could not have been claimed against the defendants unless they had had notice under s. 80. There is not even any discussion with regard to the expression "for any act purporting to be done," and I cannot accordingly read into the decision any construction of that phrase. It has also been held in Kashi Bai v. Chunilal (3) that a suit, for instance, by a mortgagee against a Receiver as representing a mortgagor would not be subject to the provisions of s. 80. The case law is discussed in this decision, and grounds are given for distinguishing between the two classes of cases. In the latter class only when the suit is founded upon some act by the official defendant which is complained of is notice required. In the present case, I have found considerable difficulty in discovering why the Receiver has been impleaded. It cannot very well be said that his appointment was illegal having been made in due course of law, and when I asked the learned Advocate appearing for the petitioner what act of the Receiver, it was intended to impugn he was only able to reply that it was not an act but an omission (which no doubt stands upon the same footing) to pay the plaintiff his one-twelfth share in the income of the properties which he claims. A reference to the plaint, however, will show that that is not the subject-matter of the suit and that it is confined to obtaining that payment in respect of future collections and not to requiring that the monies, if any, collected in the past should be liable to contribute towards it. In these circumstances, I cannot say that the learned Subordinate Judge is in error in holding that s. 80 does not apply and I dismiss the revision petition with costs of the plaintiff-respondent.

Judgment.—The question which arises in this Second Appeal which if decided against the appellant would be conclusive is whether an attachment before judgment of a co-parcener's interest when not followed by a decree during the said co-parcener's life-time operates to defeat the right of survivorship. This question is governed by direct authority in this Court Ramanayya v. Rangappayya (1). It was a decision of the year 1893. Not only has no doubt been since cast upon that decision in this Court but the view there taken has been reinforced by the converse case which is illustrated by the decisions in Muthusami Chetty v. Chinnammal (2) and Sankaralinga Mudaliar v. Official Receiver of Tinnevely (3). These latter decisions are to the effect that where the co-parcener whose interest is attached before judgment survives the decree, the attachment takes precedence over the right of survivorship; in other words, the creditor can avail himself of the attachment in order to realise his decree as against the surviving co-parceners. This being the state of authority in this Court on this question, learned Counsel for the appellant has addressed to me an argument founded upon the grounds stated in the earliest case, Ramanayya v. Rangappayya (1) to show that the reasoning is not quite logical and is not supported by the decision which is referred to there, namely, Sadayappan v. Ponnanna (4). On these grounds he asks me to post this case before a Bench. I do not think I should be justified at this distance of time in attempting to examine the logic of the decision in Ramanayya v. Rangappayya (1) or to say whether the decision in Sadayappan v. Ponnanna (4) does really support the proposition which is founded upon it. I think I should not be justified in attempting to cast a doubt upon a doctrine which has been accepted in this Court for practically 40 years. It is, I think, very important that in such matters, whatever the ultimate deci-

Where it was alleged in a complaint that the accused fabricated a pro-note and induced A to file a suit against B and obtained a fraudulent decree with the object of getting the house of B, and the accused was convicted under ss. 467 and 109, Penal Code :

Held, that the complaint disclosed an offence under s. 193, Indian Penal Code, of intentionally fabricating false evidence for the purpose of being used in a stage of judicial proceedings, and a Court confronted with such a complaint by private person and not preferred under s. 476, Criminal Procedure Code, had no jurisdiction to take cognizance of it and the conviction was, therefore, illegal.

Where a Court proceeds upon a complaint which is no legal complaint at all, the error cannot be corrected under s. 537, Criminal Procedure Code, nor has s. 532 any relevancy to such a case.

Criminal Appeal against an order of the Court of Sessions of the North Arcot Division at Vellore, in Case No. 6 of the Calendar for 1931.

Mr. A. S. Sirakaminathan, for the Appellant.

The Public Prosecutor, on behalf of the Crown.

Jackson, J.—The appellant has been sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment for abetting the forging of a promissory note.

On the facts there seems to be no doubt that the appellant is guilty under ss. 467, 109, Indian Penal Code. The evidence of the Christian Schoolmaster P. W. No. 9 proves that the accused asked him to write the draft of the promissory-note, Ex. C, after the death of its alleged maker Krishna Reddi, obviously for the purpose of a fraudulent execution.

Section 467 has no necessary connection with any Court proceeding, and when the committal order came before me upon an application to have it cancelled, I declined to interfere as there was sufficient evidence to establish a prima facie case against the accused. But now that the whole record is before us, the matter is not quite so simple. In the complaint Ex. J, it is alleged that the accused fabricated a pro-note and induced one Vata Goundan to file a suit against Krishna Reddi in the panchayat Court, and obtained a fraudulent decree. The complainant was ignorant of all this until the execution of the decree was begun in the District Munsif's Court..... "The object of bringing about these forged and fabricated transactions is to get the house of the late Krishna Reddi."

This is clearly the offence under s. 193, Indian Penal Code, of intentionally fabricating false evidence for the purpose of being used in a stage of judicial proceeding.

The Court may think the forgery a clearer count than the fabrication of evidence because on the facts of this case it is doubtful if there was any proceeding before the panchayat at all, but nevertheless the allegation is plainly stated in the complaint, and it is the allegation which attracts the mischief of s. 195 (1) (b) Criminal Procedure Code.

A Court confronted with a complaint like Ex. J, by a private person and not preferred under s. 476, Criminal Procedure Code, must refuse to take cognizance. It cannot even examine the complainant upon oath and then note that it is only taking cognizance of the offences not referred to in s. 195, Criminal Procedure Code; because the examination of the complainant on oath under s. 200 is after cognizance has been taken. But nothing of that sort was attempted in this case. The Court recorded a short sworn statement, and evidently took cognizance of every offence alleged in the written complaint.

The effect of this is that the Court proceeded upon no legal complaint at all; which is much more than a mere irregularity in the complaint. Therefore the error cannot be corrected under s. 537, Criminal Procedure Code, nor has s. 532 any relevancy to the matter; for that only validates commitments legal in themselves but made by a Magistrate not empowered to commit.

In these circumstances the conviction must be set aside as being without jurisdiction. The bail is released.

Curgenven, J.—Section 195 (1) (b) of the Code forbids a Court to take cognizance of an offence under s. 193, Indian Penal Code, when it is alleged to have been committed in, or in relation to, any proceeding in any Court, except upon the complaint of that Court. Such an offence so committed, is undoubtedly alleged in the complaint in the present case, and indeed the section of the Penal Code is quoted. The Court was precluded from taking cognizance of that offence, that complaint being a private one. The conviction was actually of abetment of forgery of a valuable security under ss. 487, 109, Indian Penal Code, but in Perianna Muthirian v. Vengu Ayyar (1), I have already given my reasons for holding that, this being only another way of dealing with what was in effect the same offence,—fabricating false evidence,—it is not open to a Court to permit the provisions of s. 195, Criminal Procedure Code, to be evaded in this manner. I agree therefore that upon this ground the conviction must be set aside, the proceedings being without jurisdiction.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 436, 437—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 463—Forgery—Discharge of accused—Pendency of Civil suit—Power to order further inquiry.

Where a person accused of forgery is discharged and the Sessions Judge is moved under ss. 436 and 437, Criminal Procedure Code, the Judge, if he thinks further inquiry necessary, should proceed under the said section and if he does not, he should dismiss the application. He has full discretion in the matter and the circumstance that the accused has lodged a civil suit in respect of the same matter is irrelevant to the question whether the discharge of the accused should or should not be set aside.

Forgery is an offence of too grave a public importance to be made merely triable by Subordinate Magistrates.

Criminal Revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Guntur Division, dated the 15th January, 1931, and made in Criminal Revision Petition No. 13 of 1930.

Messrs. V. Govindrajachari and K. Krishnamurthy, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Konda Kottayya, for the Respondent.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Order.—The petitioner complained against the counter-petitioner for forgery; the counter-petitioner then filed a civil suit in regard to the same matter. The Sub-Magistrate discharged the accused, and the Sessions Judge when moved under ss. 436 and 437, Criminal Procedure Code, was apparently disposed to order further inquiry but did not do so because the prosecution of the complaint would be "embarrassing to the Civil Court" without being "conclusive or even useful." The matter "had better be left to the Civil Courts in the first instance" with a strong precept that if the Civil Court thinks the criminal charge substantiated, it will have "no compunction" in taking criminal action.

This order has little merit. If the Judge thinks further inquiry necessary, he should proceed under s. 436 or s. 437; and if he does not he should dismiss the application. As he says himself, he has a full discretion in the matter. But to such a matter the comparison between Civil and Criminal Courts is quite irrelevant. If a man accused of forgery lodges a civil suit it cannot be said that his trial should be stayed because it may embarrass the Court that tries the suit. In the first place it will not embarrass it and in the second, it is entirely immaterial to the administration of criminal justice whether it embarrasses it or not. Of course a criminal conviction duly upheld is both conclusive and useful. There is no justification for the view that Civil Courts are a better forum than Criminal Courts for judging issues of fact. Therefore, the circumstance that this accused person has chosen to lodge a civil suit is absolutely irrelevant to the question which was before the Judge, whether his discharge should or should not be set aside.

Turning to the real question it is found that the complainant and the accused settled their account with no mention at all of the lists which subsequently appeared and are impugned as forgeries. As the learned Judge says Exs. F, S and K go a great way towards showing that Exs. O and P cannot be genuine transactions. That being so, the Court of committal was not in law justified in discharging the accused. Forgery is an offence of too grave a public importance to be made merely triable by Sub-Magistrates.

The learned Judge is directed to proceed under s. 437, which is really the logical conclusion of his fifth paragraph and have the case brought up to the Sessions. It may be observed as this Court has had occasion to remark before that the matter will then be tried by the same person as would in the ordinary course be ultimately seised of it on the civil side. So long as the District and the Sessions jurisdiction is vested in the same person these invidious comparisons between Civil and Criminal Courts are utterly beside the point.

The petition is allowed.

If a person does an act for which a licence is required, and fails to obtain a licence, he may be prosecuted within three months of the expiry of the period for which the licence, if granted, would have been current. The period of three months referred to in s. 223, Madras Local Boards Act, is not, therefore, to be reckoned from the commencement of the offence where the offence is a continuing one as in the case of plying without licence a motor car. *Arthur v. Mr. P. Venkataramana Rao, for the Petitioner.

Mr. K. Swaminathan, for Mr. A. Viswanatha Sastri, for the Respondent.

The Public Prosecutor on behalf of the Crown.

Order.—This petition has been filed by the President of the District Board, Tanjore, against a judgment acquitting the respondent of the offence of using a motor vehicle for hire without a licence. Such an act is prohibited by s. 166 (1) of the Madras Local Boards Act (Madras Act XIV of 1920 as amended by XI of 1930), and is rendered punishable by s. 207 read with Sch. VIII. The lower Court has found indeed that the respondent used his motor bus for hire without taking out a licence, but it considers that complaint was not made within the time prescribed by s. 223.

The question turns upon the construction of that section. It provides that no person shall be tried for an offence under the Act, 'unless complaint is made by the Police, or the president of a Local Board, or by a person expressly authorised in this behalf by the Local Board or its President within three months of the commission of the offence.' To the section is added this proviso:

"Provided that failure to take out a licence or obtain permission under this Act shall for the purpose of this section be deemed a continuing offence until the expiration of the period, if any, for which the licence or permission is required, and if no period is specified, complaint may be made at any time within twelve months from the commencement of the offence."

It is urged for the petitioner that, the offence being a continuing one until the 31st December 1930, when the period expired for which the licence was required, a complaint made within three months of that date, as was the case here, would be in time. For the respondent I am asked to hold with the lower Court that time must be reckoned from the commencement of continuing offence i. e., from the date, 1st October, from which the licence, which was issued quarterly, should have been taken out.

In King Emperor v. U. Thin Ohn (1) a question of this kind arose under the City of Rangoon Municipal Act in connection with a case of keeping a private market without a licence: but I have been unable to apply the reasoning there employed, because the learned Judge who decided the case based his decision upon the date when the Commissioner of the Corporation came to know that the offence was being committed. I have not seen the Rangoon Act; but such a test will not, I think, accord with the terms of the Madras Act. There is however this principle recognised in the decision, that time has not to be counted from the point when commission of the offence began. That was the view taken in Emperor v. Bechardas (2). The prosecution there was for allowing to remain undemolished a house constructed in contravention of Municipal regulations, and the learned Judges point out that any other construction placed upon provisions of this character would in such circumstances enable the Municipality to prosecute the owner of a completed building after any period whatever. The same considerations certainly do not arise here, where the owner of the motor bus breaks the law every time he uses it without a licence. On the other hand, I have been referred to a case of this Court, 108 Ind. Cas. 411, Arthur v. Appavu Velan (3), where Devadoss, J., held that a person who kept an unlicensed potter's kiln was liable to prosecution at any time within three months of the expiry of the during which the licence, if it had been granted, would have been current.

This last case is, I think, clear authority for the view put forward for the petitioner. It is objected that, on the wording of the proviso, it is not possible to apply it to the circumstances of such a case as the present; that the offence does not really consist, as the proviso would require, in a failure to take out a licence, but in an act, or a series of acts, of using a motor vehicle without licence; and that the section without the proviso requires that the period of three months should embrace that act or series of acts. Verbally, no doubt, there is some ground for a criticism of this kind. But I think that the intention of the section, read with its proviso, is clear. The essential part of the offence, from the point of view of the District Board, is a failure to take out a licence, on the part of a person who has by his conduct obliged himself to do so, for the period under reference—here the last quarter of 1930. It is not very material when and on how many occasions he used his bus during that quarter. Even if he used it only once he was no less bound to obtain a licence for the whole quarter. The terms of the proviso support this view by allowing in such cases a period of three months from the date when the licence would have expired for complaint to be made. The rule accordingly is simply this: If a person does an act for which a licence is required, and fails to obtain a licence, he may be prosecuted within three months of the expiry of the period for which the licence, if granted, would have been current. That, I think, is what the proviso, read with the section, means, and so construed it does not seem to afford undue opportunity for delay in taking action.

I conclude therefore that the complaint in the present case was within time. Since the learned Second Class Magistrate has Second Civil Appeal against the decree of the Sub-Judge, Ramnad, in A. S. No. 62 of 1926.

Mr. C. A. Seshagiri Sastri, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. V. Krishnaswami Ayyar, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—Defendant No. 5 is the appellant and his appeal arises out of a suit brought by the deceased plaintiff, whose legal representative is the present respondent No. 1 for the recovery of a sum of money alleged to be due on a registered usufructuary mortgage bond dated 30th December, 1912, and executed to the plaintiff by defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and by defendant No. 1 as the guardian of defendant No. 4 for Rs. 700. The mortgagee was to enjoy the mortgaged property in lieu of interest for a period of five years. Defendant No. 5 is a subsequent purchaser of the mortgaged property. The main point in dispute in the suit is one relating to the discharge of the suit mortgage debt. The original suit mortgage deed was not produced by the plaintiff but it has come to Court from the custody of defendant No. 5. The plaintiff has set forth his version as to how defendant No. 5 came by this document, whereas defendant No. 5 has pleaded that this document was got back after discharging the mortgage debt. The mortgage bond, Ex. 1, purports to bear an endorsement of discharge signed by the plaintiff. In view of the facts disclosed in the pleadings, the trial Court, taking a correct view of the presumption of law in a case of this kind framed issue No. 1 in a proper way, so as to throw the incidence of the burden of proof upon the plaintiff. Issue No. 1 framed by that Court is, whether the suit mortgage deed remained undischarged.

On this question, both sides adduced oral and documentary evidence and after a full and careful view of the entire evidence and the probabilities, the trial Court came to the conclusion that the mortgage bond remained undischarged. On that footing it gave a decree in plaintiff's favour. The lower Appellate Court also came to the same conclusion and confirmed the decree of the first Court. There being a concurrent finding on this question of fact by both the Courts, it is not possible to reject that finding, unless it is shown that it is vitiated by any of the flaws contemplated in s. 100, Civil Procedure Code. The way in which the lower Appellate Court has dealt with this question indicates to my mind that it has given due weight to the circumstances disclosed in the evidence which favour one side or the other; and after weighing the evidence and probabilities on both sides it has thought fit to believe the plaintiff's version as true and more probable. All that can be said in favour of defendant No. 5 in this case is, that he starts with an initial presumption in his favour. That is a rebuttable presumption and the question whether a presumption is rebutted or not is a question of fact to be determined according to the circumstances of each case. An attempt has been made by the learned Advocate for the appellant to canvass the evidence adduced in this case, in order to show that the lower Appellate Court was not quite correct in preferring one kind of evidence to the other. It is open to that court to appreciate the evidence in the best manner according to its discretion, and where evidence has been properly admitted on both sides, even if its conclusion on a question of fact is erroneous, it cannot be interfered with in second appeal. It is unnecessary for me to review the evidence as in a first appeal and come to a conclusion on this question of fact. I consider that the finding of both the Courts below on this question is entitled to acceptance and I accordingly confirm that finding.

One other point had been taken for the first time in this second appeal, and that relates to the award of interest to the plaintiff on the mortgage amount for the period subsequent to his dispossession. Somehow, defendant No. 5 failed to take an issue on this point and it does not appear that he took up this objection even in the appeal preferred by him against the decision of the first Court. No doubt, in para. 12 of his written statement he has taken the plea that no damages are payable by him to the plaintiff as claimed in the plaint. The courts below have thought fit to award interest at 12 per cent for the subsequent period as a fair and reasonable rate of interest. The question is, whether under the terms of the mortgage deed, Ex. 1, interest is allowable to the plaintiff after the period of five years fixed for redemption. The deed recites that after the expiration of this period the principal amount of Rs. 700 should be paid to the plaintiff and the mortgage redeemed. If without the payment of the principal amount to the plaintiff, he is deprived of possession of the mortgaged properties, is he not entitled to reasonable interest by way of damages on grounds of equity? I take it that the lower court have allowed interest on equitable grounds. The rate fixed is not unduly high and there is no reason to reduce that rate. But the question is, whether the interest so awarded can be claimed along with the principal amount of the mortgage and made chargeable on the mortgaged property.

As to this, reliance is placed on the appellant's side on the decision in Manikchand Mangachand v. Rangappa Kondappa (1). In that case, the mortgage bond itself recites that after the stipulated period, the principal amount was to be recovered without interest by sale of the mortgaged property. In the mortgage deed in question in the present case, there is no such express provision negating the right of the mortgagee to interest after the period fixed in the deed. On the other hand, the decisions in Linga Reddi v. Sama Rau (2) and Sita Nath Ghose v. Thakurdas Chakravathy (3), referred to by the learned Advocate for respondent No. 1 show that interest is allowable in a case of this kind and it can be made also a charge on the mortgaged property. The observation in the Madras case is to the effect that, if the plaintiff was entitled to the usufruct of the mortgaged property in lieu of interest, it is premissible to award a reasonable rate of interest as damages which may be more or less equivalent to the usufruct of the land. The learned Judges further observed that such interest when allowed can be made a charge upon the property. The same view has been held in the Calcutta case also. I am, therefore, of opinion that there is nothing illegal in allowing interest to the plaintiff subsequent to the period of five years fixed in the mortgage bond and in the direction to make this interest also recoverable by the sale of the mortgaged property.

In the result, the second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs of respondent No. 1. In view of the undertaking given by the appellant when obtaining a stay order in O. M. P. No. 4498 of 1927, subsequent interest on the amount due under the mortgage-decree will be taken to be nine per cent. per annum instead of six per cent. from 5th January, 1928.

Second Civil Appeal against the decree of the Sub-Judge, Tanjore, in A. S. No. 27 of 1927.

Messrs. C. S. Venkatachariar and S. Ramaswami Ayyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. A. Seshagiri Sastri, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The plaintiff is the appellant in this case. The suit is filed upon a mortgage bond, Ex. A, dated 31st August, 1912. It was executed for Rs. 400, but the plaintiff admits that only Rs. 300 out of the consideration was advanced and the other Rs. 100 was not advanced to defendant No. 1. The mortgage purported to be a mortgage with possession of certain properties of defendant No. 1, but as a matter of fact possession of the properties was not delivered to the plaintiff. The plaintiff therefore claims damages in the shape of mesne profits for three years, which he claims to be Rs. 285 at the rate of Rs. 95 a year. Defendant No. 1 pleaded that the mortgage was not supported by consideration. Both the lower Courts found that it was supported by consideration to the extent of Rs. 300. Mr. Seshagiri Sastri, the learned Advocate for the respondents, repeated the argument that the document was merely nominal and was not supported by consideration. He has not filed any cross-objections but has mentioned this point merely for supporting the decree so that I may not give the additional relief which the appellant seeks. However, I do not see any reason why I should not accept the finding of the both the court below that the document is supported by consideration to the extent of Rs. 300. The courts below disallowed the damages claimed, namely, Rs. 285 on the ground that the plaintiff's claim for possession of the properties is now barred and therefore the claim for mesne profits of these properties is also barred. The document fixed three years for payment of the principal, but as possession of the properties was not delivered, it is true that the plaintiff's cause of action for getting possession of the properties arose on the date of the document itself, namely, 31st August, 1912. But Mr. Venkatachariar, the learned Advocate for the appellant relies on Ers. B and B 1 as acknowledgments and he relies also on a case in Anant Ram v. Inayat Ali Khan (1).

The entries in Ers. B and B 1 are merely entries showing that defendant No. 1 received Rs. 203 towards the consideration of the mortgage document. It is difficult to say that these amount to acknowledgments of the liability to transfer possession of the mortgaged properties. In the case in Anant Ram v. Inayat Ali Khan (1), it was observed that acknowledgment of a right carries with it all its consequences. Very often it may be so; but even then it is difficult to infer by the acknowledgment of the mortgage document itself that the liability to deliver possession of the properties was intended to be also acknowledged. However I do not wish to express any final opinion on this matter as the case can be disposed of on other grounds. The right to damages is merely the right to get interest. Exhibit A itself shows that the profits of the properties mortgaged and intended to be delivered were to be enjoyed by the plaintiff in lieu of interest. So the damages the plaintiff sustains by the non delivery of possession are merely interest. In Linga Reddi v. Sama Rau (2), it was observed at page 472*, it is the same interest that is awarded as damages. That case is practically on all fours to this case with this difference, that the rate of interest was mentioned in the document of that case as 10 per cent, whereas it is not mentioned in the document before us, and here the plaintiff's claim is now confined only to damages for three years. The decision in Sita Nath

(2) 17 Mad. 469; 4 M. L. J. 143.

Ghouse v. Thakurdas Chakravarthy (3) also supports the appellant. That case resembles the present case much more than the case in Linga Reddi v. Sama Rau (2), because the rate of interest was also not mentioned in the document there, 12 per cent was claimed as damages in that case, and the High Court observed that it was not excessive. As against these two decisions Mr. Seshagiri Sastri relies on two decisions of the Bombay High Court. One is Mahadoji v. Joti (4). In that case it was observed that the plaintiff was entitled to possession in lieu of interest and if he never troubles himself to obtain possession he lost his right to interest. That sentence by itself produces the impression that the defendant in that case was willing to give possession or offered to give possession to the plaintiff, but the plaintiff did not care to take it. But I do not find in the statement of facts anything to support the suggestion that the plaintiff was not willing to take possession. If the decision in that case rests on that fact, it may be correct, i.e., that the mortgagee is not willing to take possession or does not want to take the trouble of taking possession and managing the properties though the mortgagor is willing to deliver them to him. It may be in such a case he is not entitled to interest, but if the mortgagor fails to deliver possession to the mortgagee in breach of the covenant in the document, in such a case, to say that the mortgagee loses his right to interest merely because the mortgagee has not taken any immediate steps to enforce possession, is not justified. This decision is followed in another decision of the same court in Manikchand Maganchand v. Rangappa Kondappa (5). That decision practically presents to me the same difficulty as the earlier decision.

Where a mortgagor is guilty of the breach of the covenant to deliver possession, the mortgagee is entitled to fall back on the claim for interest, whether it is described as interest or described as damages for breach of the covenant to deliver possession, but to say that it is the business of the mortgagee to get into possession and if he does not get possession he is not entitled to interest or damages at all does not commend itself to me. A proposition of that kind gives a premium to the mortgagors to commit breaches of the covenant into which they have entered.

(3) 52 Ind. Cas. 433; 46 C. 448.

(4) 17 B. 425.

It is observed by the Chief Justice in this case:

"It would be a very bad precedent if we hold that a usufructuary mortgagee could lie by and not take the trouble to get into possession, relying upon his being able afterwards to make a claim before the court for damages for not having been given possession."

If it is meant that a mortgagee who is not willing to take possession even if the mortgagor is willing to offer possession is not entitled to sympathy, I agree. But if more is meant by the sentence quoted that even where a mortgagor refuses to deliver or does not deliver possession the mortgagee should lose interest because he has not immediately taken steps to get into possession is to make a person who breaks his contract not liable for the consequences of the breach, and I do not agree with it. The two Bombay decisions are in my opinion inconsistent with the decisions in Linga Reddi v. Shama Rau (2) and Sita Nath Ghouse v. Thakurdas Chakravarthy (3) and I prefer to follow the decision of this court and of the Calcutta High Court. I see that my brother Sundaram Chetty, J., is also taking the same view in his decision in Gurusami Thevan v. Ganapathi Chetti (6). He has also tried to distinguish the case in Manikchand Manganchand v. Rangappa Kondappa by an observation that in that case, the amount was to be recovered without interest according to the terms of the mortgage bond. This is not the ground upon which the learned Judges base their decision, and I prefer to express my disagreement of the decision rather than distinguish it in this way.

Mr. Seshagiri Sastri also contended that a claim for damages cannot be maintained after six years of the breach and he referred to cases of leases and sales. We have nothing to do with these cases. In the case of a mortgagee, if there is a breach of a covenant, a claim for damages remains unbarred so long as the claim for the principal is also unbarred. This is the principle stated by the Privy Council in Mathura Das v. Rajah Narindar Bahadur (7). That is a case where there is no provision for payment of interest after the due date. It is given as damages by the Privy Council and they held that it is not barred. This was followed by this court in Nityananda Patnayudu v. Sri Radha

(5) 59 Ind. Cas. 765; A. I. R. 1921 Bom. 28; 45 B. 528; 22 Bom. L. R. 1435.

(6) 136 Ind. Cas. 783; A. I. R. 1932 Mad. 173.

(7) 19 All. 39; 23 I. A. 138; 7 Sar. 88 (P. C.)

Ghairana Deo (8). I think the principle of those cases applies. By failure to deliver possession of the property the plaintiff is deprived of his interest, and the claim for such damages for failure in the shape of interest cannot be barred so long as the main claim is not barred. In this case however the plaintiff confined it to damages for three years only prior to suit. He is not entitled to get larger or very exorbitant rate of interest under the guise of a claim for mesne profits, especially as he did not care even to have the rate of interest mentioned in the mortgage bond as in the case of Sita Nath Ghose v. Thakurdas Chakravorthy (3). I think the interests of justice will be best served by giving interest at 12 per cent. on the principal sum of Rs. 200 in addition to the sum decreed by the lower Court. The plaintiff will be entitled also to get interest at 6 per cent. from the date of the decree up to the date of payment. The plaintiff will be entitled to a decree at 12 per cent on the sum of Rs. 300 from 27th February 1922 to 6th September 1926, the date of the District Munsif's decree, and on the aggregate amount at 6 per cent. It is admitted that Rs. 300 already decreed by the courts below has been paid, so that the further interest at 6 per cent. will be calculated only on the amount of interest, i.e., Rs. 162 with interest at 6 per cent. from the date of the District Munsif's decree. Each party will bear his own costs throughout except in the memorandum of objections filed in the lower Appellate Court as to which the order of the lower Appellate Court will stand.

U. P. Municipalities Act (II of 1916), s. 298 (1)—List I, Group II cl. (e)—Promoting or maintaining health, safety and convenience of inhabitants—Bye-law prohibiting residence of prostitutes in particular area, legality of.

The prohibition against public prostitutes from residing in a particular street or area given may be for the purpose of promoting or maintaining the health, safety and convenience of the inhabitants of the municipality within the meaning of s. 298 (1) of the U. P. Municipalities Act and a bye-law to that effect therefore can be validly made under that section. But such a bye-law must not be discriminating in its effects. The prohibition must be aimed against the residence of public prostitutes in general and not the residence of any individual prostitutes or class of prostitutes. [p. 788, col. 1.]

Messrs. Shiva Prasad Sinha and S. B. L. Gaur, for the Applicant

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is an application in revision from an order convicting the accused under s. 299 of the U. P. Municipalities Act for having committed a breach of a Municipal bye-law.

On 13th July, 1925, the Municipal Board of Hathras got a notification published in the Government Gazette under which the following bye-law among others, was announced:—

"No public prostitute shall reside within the areas or in the streets specified below, provided that public prostitutes who at the end of March, 1925, owned and resided in houses and streets in areas mentioned below may continue to reside in those houses."

Then followed a list of no less than 13 items containing roads, bazars, abadi, lanes, etc.

The bye-law was expressly not made applicable to public prostitutes who had owned and resided in houses and streets in the areas mentioned at the end of March, 1925. It was intended to apply to new comers only.

This notification was replaced by another notification of 27th April, 1927, which contained the same bye law.

The applicant, although she denied the fact, has been found by both the Courts below to be a public prostitute and to have been carrying on her profession as such. This finding must be accepted in revision.

There is no doubt that she has committed a breach of the bye-law mentioned above because the house occupied by her is situated in one of the streets which had been prohibited.

The learned Advocate for the applicant impugns the validity of the bye-law and urges that the conviction is illegal because the bye-law itself was invalid.

Under s. 298 (1) a Board is empowered to make bye laws applicable to the whole or any part of the municipality for the purpose of promoting or maintaining the health, safety and convenience of the inhabitants of the municipality, and for the furtherance of Municipal administration.

Group H in the list I appended to the section provides in cl. (e) for "prohibiting in any specified street or area the residing of public prostitutes and the keeping of a brothel or the letting or other disposal of a house or building to public prostitutes or for a brothel."

There is no doubt that the prohibition against public prostitutes from residing in a particular street or area given may be for the purpose of promoting or maintaining the health, safety, and convenience of the inhabitants of the Municipality, and that, therefore, such a bye-law can be validly made.

But the bye law must aim at prohibiting in specified streets or areas the residing of public prostitutes or the keeping of a brothel, etc. It must not be discriminating in its effect. It would be illegal for a Municipal Board to single out any individual prostitute and prohibit her from residing in a particular area. Similarly, it would be illegal to pick out a group of prostitutes and prohibit them from residing in a particular area. The bye-law must be general and must prohibit the residing of public prostitutes in that area. The prohibition must be aimed against the residence of public prostitutes in general and not the residence of individual prostitutes or any particular class of prostitutes. It is obvious that when a discrimination is made, the object for which the bye-law was framed would be nullified and there would be no promotion or maintenance of the health, safety and convenience of the inhabitants. Such a bye-law will merely create an invidious distinction and be beneficial to one class of prostitutes and injurious to the others. I am perfectly satisfied that this is not what is contemplated by the Legislature. The prohibition must be general and of universal application within a specified street or area and must not hit particular prostitutes, while leaving other prostitutes free to ply their trade.

The language of the bye law as quoted above not only permits prostitutes who owned and resided in houses in March, 195 to continue to live there as before but even perhaps permits prostitutes who merely resided in the streets in the areas to carry on their profession undisturbed. Such a bye-law was not in accordance with the provisions of s. 298 because it did not amount to a prohibition of the residence of public prostitutes but merely to a prohibition against a particular class of prostitutes.

(1 A. W. N. (1902) 117 ; 24 A. 439.

In Emperor v. Balkishan (1) a learned Judge of this Court declined to give effect to a bye law made by the Naini Tal Municipal Board where it appeared that an invidious and unreasonable distinction was drawn between a person who is a servant and a person of a similar degree who is not a servant.

I accordingly accept this revision and setting aside the conviction of the accused, acquit her of the offence with which she was charged and direct that the fine if paid be refunded.

The Municipal Board of Hathras would be well advised to re-draft this bye-law so as to make it of general application.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 27—Additional evidence in appeal—Refusal to admit—Second appeal, competency of.

Where a lower Appellate Court refuses to admit a certain material document as additional evidence in an appeal under O. XLI, r. 27, Civil Procedure Code, the High Court cannot interfere in second appeal. Vaithinatha Pillai v. Kuppu Shevar (1), Santa Singh v. Bhan Singh (2) and Durga Prasad v. Jai Narain (3), relied on. [p. 789, col. 2.]

Miscellaneous Second Appeal from an order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Amritsar, dated the 2nd March, 1931.

Mr. Ajit Ram, for the Appellant.

Mr. Harbans Singh, for the Respondent.

Agha Haidar, J.—The appeal arises out of certain execution proceedings. The decree-holder proceeded to attach certain property. The judgment-debtor raised the plea that the property was ancestral and, therefore, was not liable to attachment. The trial Court held that the property was not ancestral and overruled the plaintiff's objection. The judgment-debtor went up in appeal. One of the grounds of appeal, that is No. 2, taken by him was that the lower Court had erred in giving its decision without examining the entries in certain revenue papers relating to the land attached.

It appears that the appellant had given these papers to his Counsel for producing them in the case but the latter did not produce them.

The first portion of this ground of appeal is without any substance whatsoever. The document had not been placed on the record and, therefore, it was impossible for the trial Court to examine the entries in the said document relating to the land in question. These copies were produced before the lower Appellate Court and an application accompanied by an affidavit, was filed by the appellant asking the Court to admit additional evidence under the provisions of O. XLI, r. 27 of the Civil Procedure Code.

I have satisfied myself that the appellant applied for the copies on the 27th October, 1930, and that he obtained them on the same day. The next hearing of the case was on the 31st of October, when evidence had to be produced. The appellant's affidavit alleges that the copies were given by the judgment-debtor to his Counsel but that the Counsel did not produce them in Court. Now, the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court observes as follows:—

"The appellant has now put in a copy of jamabandi along with the memorandum of appeal in order to prove that the land attached has been in possession of the appellant and his ancestors since 1865. The fard itself does not prove this and I see no reason to admit it in evidence at this stage when it was not originally produced."

In other words the learned Senior Subordinate Judge, in the exercise of his discretion, refused to admit the document. In my judgment the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court was right. To hold otherwise would be to put a premium on gross negligence of the parties and their Counsel. In this case the judgment-debtor actually obtained copies and gave them to his pleader. If the pleader was negligent and did not produce these copies at the proper time the remedy of the judgment-debtor, if any, lies in filing a suit for damages against his pleader. That matter is, however, not before me and I do not express any opinion one way or the other.

The question now is, whether, in second appeal it is open to this Court to admit additional evidence. There is a Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court reported as Vaithinatha Pillai v. Kuppu Shevar (1), where the learned Chief Justice followed the course of decisions of the Madras and Allahabad High Courts and held that no second appeal lay from a refusal by the lower Appellate Court to admit fresh evidence under O. XLI, r. 27 of the Civil Procedure Code. It is true that Mr. Justice Sadasiva Iyer gave a dissentient judgment in the Full Bench but, in my judgment the opinion of the Majority of the Full Bench seems to be consonant with the authorities and general principles. In Santa Singh v. Bhan Singh (2) Mr. Justice Broadway followed Vaithinatha Pillai v. Kuppu Shevar (1) and held that where a lower Appellate Court refuses to admit a certain material document as additional evidence, in the appeal under O. XLI, r. 27, Civil Procedure Code, the High Court cannot interfere in second appeal. To the same effect is a judgment reported as Durga Prasad v. Jai Narain (3) where a Division Bench held that a refusal in the exercise of discretion to admit additional evidence under O. XLI, r. 27, of the Civil Procedure Code, will not afford a ground for second appeal. There are a number of other decisions to the same effect which need not be referred to. In my judgment it was a matter of discretion for the lower Appellate Court to admit or to refuse to admit additional evidence. That Court had declined to admit that evidence and it cannot be said that the discretion exercised by it was either perverse or contrary to law or against the well recognised judicial principles. No other point was argued before me.

Under these circumstances I refuse to admit additional evidence and confirming the decree of the Court below, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Letters Patent Appeal against an order of Mr. Justice Boys, dated the 8th May, 1930.

Mr. Mansur Alam, for the Appellant.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—A suit for a declaration of their rights to fish was filed by the plaintiffs and among the reliefs claimed in the plaint was one for the costs of the suit. On the 3rd of August, 1927, the parties agreed to refer the whole case to the arbitration of five arbitrators. It was not a reference of specific points out of the whole case. There can be no doubt that the dispute in the case including one relating to costs of the litigation and that dispute also was referred to the arbitration. The arbitrators delivered an award in favour of the plaintiffs decreeing their claim but in the award they made no mention of any costs. Objections were filed to the award by the defendants but the plaintiffs did not object to the award on the ground that it was defective inasmuch as it omitted to give them costs. The learned Munsif overruled the objection and directed that a decree should be prepared in terms of the award. He, however, ordered that the plaintiffs should get two-thirds of their entire costs from the defendants who should receive one third of their costs from the plaintiffs. On appeal to the lower Appellate court by the defendants it was held that the learned Munsif had no jurisdiction to award costs when the arbitrators had failed to do so. The learned Judge disallowed all costs to the plaintiffs. On appeal to this Court a learned Judge came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs were entitled to costs because the Munsif had power to grant them costs. The learned Judge pointed out that when the Court had been given an express power to grant costs of arbitration under para. 13 of Sch. II it would be manifestly inequitable that the Court should have no power to give costs actually incurred in its own Court. He also relied on s. 35, Civil Procedure Code, which gives the discretion to the Court in the matter of costs. The observations made on general grounds have great force, but we are bound by the language of the Code.

There were three stages in the suit. Costs were incurred by the plaintiffs up to the time of the reference to arbitration. We have already pointed out that having regard to the language of the agreement of reference, it included the dispute as to costs which had been expressly claimed in the plaint. The next stage was the proceeding before the arbitrators and the costs were incurred in that proceeding. There can be no doubt that under para. 13 of the Second Schedule the Court has full power to grant costs of arbitration when the award contains no sufficient provision concerning them. The third stage was when the objections to the award were filed and they were disallowed. The Court had undoubtedly power to grant costs of this proceeding to the plaintiffs.

As regards the costs incurred prior to the reference which also were referred to the arbitration, the difficulty is caused by the provisions of para. 3 (2) of Sch. II which lays down that 'where a matter is referred to arbitration the Court shall not, save in the manner and to the extent provided in this schedule, deal with such matter in the same suit'. If therefore, the question of the costs of the litigation was referred to arbitration the latter was precluded from dealing with that matter in the same suit. If the Court considered that the award was defective inasmuch as it omitted to award costs it might have remitted the award to the arbitrators for further consideration, but neither of the parties asked the Court to do that. When the award was not remitted the Court had no power to deal with the question of costs of litigation which had been referred to arbitrators and which was left undecided by them.

Section 35, Civil Procedure Code, in no way helps the plaintiffs for the discretion to award costs is subject to such condition and limitation as may be prescribed and to the provisions of any law for the time being in force. As the court was precluded from going into that matter by virtue of the provisions contained in para. 3 of Sch. II, it no longer had any discretion to award costs. It may also be pointed out that as soon as the dispute as regards costs of litigation was referred to arbitration, the Court became functus officio, so far as this matter was concerned and could not decide this question.

The learned Advocate for the respondent

ents has in support of the view taken by the learned Judge of this Court relied on the case of Ram Charan v. Jasoda (1). The learned Judges of the Oudh Court referred to para 13 of Sch. II which would suggest that they were dealing only with the costs of the arbitration proceedings. If they meant to hold that the Court had power to grant costs of the entire litigation even if the same had been referred to the arbitrators we would not agree with that view.

We accordingly allow this appeal in part and modifying the decree of the learned Judge of this Court direct that the plaintiffs should be given costs of the arbitration proceeding if any and the taxable costs of the objections filed subsequent to the award in the Court of first instance; but that the plaintiffs should not be allowed any costs of the suit incurred up to the date of the reference to arbitration. Let the decree be modified accordingly. The parties shall receive and pay costs in proportion to their success and failure so far as the amount of costs claimed by the plaintiff and denied by the defendants is concerned.

Appeal allowed.

RESPONDENT.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 4, 68—Attachment by court through Receiver—Claim not preferred within 21 days—Power of court to enquire—‘Act of receiver’, what constitutes.

Where on an application made by a creditor, the insolvency court ordered the Official Receiver to take possession of certain property alleged to belong to the insolvent and the Official Receiver in pursuance of the said order attached this property :

Held, that the attachment was not act or decision of the Receiver, within the meaning of s. 68, Provincial Insolvency Act, and a claim put forward by a stranger to the said property could be enquired into even though it was made more than 21 days after the date of the attachment. Bhairon Prasad v. S. P. C. Dass (1), distinguished. [p. 791, col. 2]

Second Appeal from an order of the District Judge, Agra, dated the 6th December, 1930.

Messrs. S. N. Seth and Raj Narain Singh, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal arising out of an insolvency proceeding. On an application made by a creditor the insolvency court ordered the Official Receiver to take possession of certain property alleged to belong to the insolvent. The Official Receiver, in pursuance of the said order, attached this property on the 8th June, 1929. On the 2nd July the son of the insolvent applied to the insolvency court alleging that the property was his own property. The insolvency court decided that the house belonged to the son, and released it from attachment. In that court an objection was taken that the application to the court had been more than 21 days after the attachment by the Receiver.

An appeal was preferred to the District Judge, before whom it was urged that the application having been made more than 21 days after the date of attachment, it should not have been entertained.

The learned Judge has overruled this contention, and in our opinion rightly. The house was attached under an order of the insolvency court, and not by any independent decision of the Official Receiver. The actual attachment was a mere ministerial act done in pursuance of the order of the court. The objector was not challenging the act of the Receiver, who had no voice in the matter, but the order of attachment passed by the court ex parte. It seems to us that it was not an act or decision of the Receiver within the meaning of s. 68. On the other hand, it was a claim put forward by a stranger to the insolvency proceedings setting up his own independent title, and it fell within the scope of s. 4 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. It was open to the court to enquire into the question of title and adjudicate upon the rights of the objector. The learned District Judge is not wrong in holding that the application was not barred by time.

The learned Advocate for the appellant relies on the case of Bhairon Prasad v. S. P. C. Dass (1) and Husaini v. Muhammad Zamir Abedi (2). But in those cases there was not any order of the court directing attachment, but the act complained against was an act of the Receiver himself. Those cases are, therefore, distinguishable.

(2) 74 Ind. Cas. 602; 9 O. & A. L. R. 440; 26 O. C. 319; A. I. R. 1924 Oudh 294.

It is further urged that owing to some misapprehension on the part of the Counsel for the appellant, he did not press all the points in the grounds of appeal before the District Judge and confined his argument to this question of limitation only. The learned District Judge in refusing to rehear the case has pointed out that he does not believe that there was any misunderstanding. After arguments had been heard the case was put down for delivery of judgment and not for further hearing on the next date. In these circumstances if the Counsel did not advance any arguments on some of the grounds of appeal, it must be assumed that he had abandoned them. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

LACHMI NARAIN AND OTHERS—

(JUDGMENT-DEBTORS)—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 2 (2), 47—Order accepting or refusing security bond—Appeal, competency of.

An order accepting or refusing to accept a security bond is not appealable either as a 'decree' under s. 2 (2), or under the provisions of s. 47, Civil Procedure Code. Saraswati Barmania v. Golap Das Barman (1) and Dittu Ram Narsingh Das v. Dal Chand Tulsu Ram (2), relied on.

Miscellaneous First Civil Appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, First Class Delhi, dated the 1st June, 1931.

Mr. Bishan Narain, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kishan Dial, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—Two respondents obtained a mortgage decree against the appellant on 25th November, 1926. In execution of that decree certain property of the judgment-debtor was put up for sale and purchased by the decree-holder for a sum of Rs. 16,500 and the sale was confirmed on the 5th of August, 1930. On the 11th of October, 1930, the judgment-debtor filed an appeal in the High Court praying that the sale may set aside. On the 25th of March 1931, a consent was passed by Jai Lal, J., to the effect that the judgment-debtor should furnish security to the satisfaction of the executing court for the deficiency which might occur in the price in the event of the property being resold. On the 20th of April, 1931, the judgment-debtor produced one Sri Ram as a surety and an ex parte order was passed the surety on the 21st of April.

On the 24th of April, 1931, the decree-holder who had somehow got an inkling of these ex parte proceedings, made an application to the executing court that the security may be cancelled as the surety was a man of straw and that the judgment-debtor had, in collusion with the aforesaid surety practised a fraud upon the court. It was brought to the notice of the court that this Sri Ram had stood a surety in a criminal case for a sum of Rs. 300 and that he was sent to the civil prison for having made a default. The court accordingly on the 1st of June, 1931, ordered the security bond to be cancelled.

The judgment-debtor has filed an appeal to this court against this order and the only point pressed before me is that the court ought not to have cancelled the security bond after it had once accepted it.

Mr. Kishan Dial on behalf of the decree-holder has raised a preliminary objection that no appeal lies. He relied upon Saraswati Barmania v. Golap Das Barman (1) and 102 Ind. Cas. 621, Dittu Ram Narsingh Das v. Dal Chand Tulsu Ram (2). In the last case a learned single Judge of this court followed Saraswati Barmania v. Golap Das Barman (1). In these cases it has been laid down that the order accepting or refusing to accept a security is not appealable either as a "decree" under s. 2 (2) or under the provisions of s. 47, Civil Procedure Code.

In my judgment this view is correct. The order passed by the executing court on the 21st April, 1931, behind the back of the decree-holder does not bind him and in any case the executing court was justified in setting aside the said order on the true state of affairs being brought to its notice. I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Miscellaneous Petition No. 78 of 1931.

BEAUMONT, O. J., RANGNEKAR AND BARLHE, J.J.

In re PRE-AUDIENCE OF THE ACTING ADVOCATE-GENERAL.

Government of India Act, 1915 (5 & 6 Geo. V, C. 61) as amended by Government of India Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. V, C. 37), s. 114—Bar Councils Act (XXXVIII of 1926) as amended by Act XIII of 1927, ss. 2 (h), 4, 8, 12—Advocate-General, meaning of—Acting Advocate-General—Pre-audience, right of.

The acting Advocate-General is entitled to a right of pre-audience over all other Advocates in respect of all business whether for the Crown or of a private nature. [p. 795, col. 2.]

The expression 'Advocate-General' means the person for the time being legally entitled to exercise the powers of the Advocate-General. [p. 795, col. 1.]

Mr. Coltman, for Bombay Bar Association.

Mr. Chimanlal Setalvad, for Bombay Bar Council.

Beaumont, C. J.—This is a petition presented by Mr. Taraporewala as Acting Advocate General in which he asks the Court to give directions as to the right of pre-audience in this Court of the Acting Advocate-General. Mr. Coltman has appeared for the Bar Association and Sir Chimanlal Setalvad for the Bar Council, and though the matter has not been contested in any hostile spirit, they have been good enough to put forward the argument against the view of the Acting Advocate-General.

The petition has annexed to it a copy of a judgment of a Division Bench of this Court given in October, 1865. In that case it was conceded that, prior to the Government of India Act, 1858, no right of pre-audience at the Bar was enjoyed by the Advocate-General, and, therefore, a fortiori no such right was enjoyed by the acting Advocate-General. But of course before the Act of 1858, the Advocate-General was the servant of the East India Company, and not of the Crown. The Court in the case to which I am referring did not decide definitely what the rights of the Advocate-General might be; the Judges only expressed the view that he would at least be entitled to equivalent precedence to that which one of Her Majesty's Counsel would be entitled to at the Bar of England. But they held that, so far as the acting Advocate-General was concerned, he had no right of general pre-audience at the Bar, but was entitled to pre-audience limited to cases in which he appeared for the Crown.

Since the date of that decision, I understand that in practice a general right of pre-audience has been conceded to the Advocate-General. Probably that was done by treating his office as analogous to that of the Attorney General in England. It is not necessary for us to consider whether the right conceded to the Advocate-General was well founded or not, because the matter is now governed by Statute. So far as the Acting Advocate-General is concerned, the matter has been dealt with on the footing of the decision of this Court and he has been conceded a right of pre-audience when appearing for the Crown, but not when appearing for a private litigant. Mr. Taraporewala says that the position is now changed by recent legislation, and I agree with him that recent legislation has entirely altered the position and has made the decision given in 1865 no longer applicable.

The first Act to which it is necessary to refer is the Government of India Act, 1915. That Act provides in s. 114 that His Majesty may, by warrant under His Royal Sign Manual, appoint an Advocate-General for, amongst other places, the Presidency of Bombay. Then it provides that the Advocate-General may take on behalf of His Majesty such proceedings as may be taken by His Majesty's Attorney-General in England. Then sub s. (3) deals with an acting Advocate General. It provides:

"On the occurrence of a vacancy in the office of Advocate-General or during any absence or deputation of an Advocate-General the Governor-General in Council in the case of Bengal, and the Local Government in other cases, may appoint a person to act as Advocate-General; and the person so appointed may exercise powers of an Advocate-General until some person has been appointed by His Majesty to the office and has entered on the discharge of his duties, or until the Advocate-General has returned from his absence or deputation, as the case may be, or until the Governor-General in Council or the Local Government, as the case may be, cancels the acting appointment."

That is the first statutory recognition of an acting Advocate-General, and Mr. Coltman and Sir Chimanlal Setalvad point out that the Act provides that the person appointed acting Advocate General may exercise the powers of an Advocate-General, but does not provide that he is to enjoy all the rights and privileges of an Advocate-General.

The next Act, which it is necessary to look at and which to my mind is really conclusive of the whole question is the Indian Bar Councils Act. In the amending Act of 1927, s. 2, which amends s. 8 of the principal Act of 1926, there is contained in sub s. (4) the following provisions :

"The respective rights of pre-audience of Advocates of the High Court shall be determined by seniority.

Provided that the Advocate-General shall have pre-audience over all other Advocates, and King's Counsel shall have pre-audience over all Advocates except the Advocate-General."

Now it seems to me that that is an inclusive and comprehensive provision : it settles the right of pre audience in all cases. It says that the respective rights of pre-audience of Advocates of the High Court shall be determined by seniority, and the only qualification upon that is in the case of the Advocate-General and King's Counsel. I asked Mr. Coltman whether, on his reading of the Act, which is, that "Advocate-General" in that proviso means the actual holder of the office and does not include an acting Advocate-General, he would concede that the acting Advocate-General was entitled to a right of pre audience in respect of Crown business, and he said that he did concede that right, though he maintained that the right was not enjoyed by virtue of the office, but by virtue of the principle that in the King's Court the King's business must come first. But it seems to me that on Mr. Coltman's reading of the Act that admission could not be maintained in law. The Act provides that the right of pre-audience of Advocates shall be determined by seniority, and it says nothing whatever about an Advocate conducting the King's business. The only qualification is in respect of the Advocate-General and King's Counsel. No doubt it may be said that, if that be the meaning of the Act, it interferes to some extent with the prerogative of the Crown, but under s. 84, sub-s. (a), Government of India Act of 1915, a law made by any authority in British India is not to be deemed invalid solely on account of the fact that it affects the prerogative of the Crown. If the effect of the Act be, upon the construction given to it by Mr. Coltman, to take away from the acting Advocate-General all rights to pre audience, whether in respect of Crown business or any other business, that rather disposes one to think that Mr. Coltman's construction is wrong and that the expression "Advocate-General" in the proviso to s. 8 (4) indicates the person for the time being lawfully exercising the office of Advocate-General, and does not refer to the particular individual who has been appointed by Letters Patent. But in considering the construction of the Act one has of course to look at the whole Act and there are other provisions which throw some light on the meaning of the expression

"Advocate-General." In the first place there is the definition in s. 2, sub s. (b) which says :

"'Advocate-General' includes, where there is no Advocate-General the Government Advocate, and where there is no Advocate-General or Government Advocate, such officer as the Local Government may declare to be the Advocate-General for the purposes of this Act."

We are not concerned in this Presidency with the "Government-Advocate," and the definition only applies where there is no Advocate-General and it does not have any effect where there is an Advocate-General but owing to absence somebody has been appointed to act for him. Mr. Coltman says that if the Legislature had intended the expression "Advocate-General" to include an acting Advocate-General, it would have used apt words to give effect to that intention, and he refers us to other Acts, particularly the Post Office Act and the Administrator-General's Act, in which that intention is given effect to. But the argument, I think, is a double edged weapon, because it may be said with force that the Legislature must have known at the time when it passed the Bar Councils Act, that there was power under the Government of India Act to appoint an acting Advocate-General, and if it had thought that there was any doubt about what the acting Advocate-General's rights were under the Act, it would have provided for the matter in the definition clause. The fact that it has not done so rather suggests that the Legislature thought that the expression "Advocate-General" as used throughout the Act would by itself include an acting Advocate-General.

Then there are two other provisions in the Act which must be looked at. The first is s. 4 which provides that every Bar Council shall consist of fifteen members of whom one shall be the Advocate-General, and then later on it provides that the Advocate-General of Bombay shall be Chairman ex officio of the Bar Councils constituted for the High Court at Bombay. If Mr. Coltman's reading of the Act be right, the effect would be that during any temporary absence of the Advocate-General, the Bar Council would be short of one member, and would not have its ex officio Chairman. Possibly that is what the legislature meant, but it would seem to me more in accordance with the probable intentions of the Legislature that the acting Advocate-General should take the place on the Bar Council of the Advocate-General during his absence.

Then there is another material provision in s. 12 which is a section providing for bringing before the High Court cases relating to the exercise of the disciplinary jurisdiction of the Court over Advocates, and sub-s. (3) of that section provides that notice of the day fixed for hearing the case in question is to be given to the Advocate-General, and the Court is to provide the Advocate-General with an opportunity of being heard before orders are passed. No doubt, the acting Advocate-General would be the person entitled to be heard, because his right to be heard would be one of the powers of the Advocate-General which the acting Advocate-General is entitled to exercise under s. 114, Government of India Act. But if the acting Advocate-General is the person entitled to be heard, obviously he must be the person to whom notice of the day of hearing is to be given, and a right to receive a notice is no more a "power" than is a right of pre-audience. It seems to me quite clear that in that section the expression "Advocate-General" must be used in the sense of the person entitled to exercise the office of the Advocate-General.

In my judgment, upon the true construction of the Act read as a whole, the expression "Advocate-General" is used as meaning the person for the time being legally entitled to exercise the powers of the Advocate-General. If that is so, then he is given a right of pre-audience in all cases under s. 2 of the Amending Act, and all the difficulties which were suggested in argument seem to me to vanish. It was suggested that the Advocate-General and the acting Advocate-General being necessarily two different persons, it might very well happen that they would be both in Bombay at the same time and that their rights might clash; for instance, the Advocate-General might be on deputation in Bombay, and an acting Advocate-General might be appointed in his place, but the Advocate-General might have time to attend a meeting of the Bar Council, or even to hold a brief in Court, and it was suggested that in that case he would be entitled to his rights as the actual Advocate-General, and the acting Advocate-General could not have competing rights. In my view of the Act, the rights would belong to the acting Advocate-General as the person for the time being lawfully exercising the powers of the office, and the Advocate-General, in the somewhat unlikely event which has been suggested of both he and the acting Advocate-General being in Bombay at the same time, would be temporarily deprived of his rights, because he would have been temporarily superseded in his office.

In my view, therefore the matter is now disposed of by the Bar Councils Act, and we must, in answer to the petition, declare that, notwithstanding the decision of 1865, by virtue of s. 114, Government of India Act 1915, and the Bar Councils Act 1926 and the amending Act 1927, the acting Advocate-General is entitled to a right of pre-audience over all other Advocates in respect of all business whether for the Crown or of a private nature. Declared accordingly. No order as to costs.

Rangnekar, J.—I agree, but as we are taking a view different from that taken by a Division Bench of this Court in 1865, I desire to state shortly my reasons.

The question which is now raised on the petition came up before Mr. M. R. Sausse, O J., and Westropp, J., in 1865 and was answered against the acting Advocate-General. The ratio decidendi of the judgment, as I understand it, was that the office of the acting Advocate-General did not appear to have had any strictly legal origin, and during the temporary absence of the Advocate-General, the then subordinate Government nominated a substitute or a 'locum tenens' to perform the duties attached to the office. In this way a usage—to use the words of the judgment—the offspring of necessity arose. Then came the Statute 21 and 22 Vic. c. 106 and by s. 30 of the Statute the appointment of the acting Advocate-General was legalized. The next step in the argument was that this section merely legalized the appointment and did nothing more, and, therefore, whatever the rights and privileges of the acting Advocate-General were, they remained in the same position after the Act as they were before it. It was admitted in that case by the petitioner that before the Act he had not claimed and was not given any right of pre-audience at the Bar, and, therefore, the learned Judges held that even after the Act he was not entitled to the right which he did not possess before it.

Since that decision we have now on the Statute Book two important Statutes, the one passed by Parliament, viz., the Government of India Act, 1915, and secondly the Bar Councils Act of 1926, as amended by the amended Act of 1927, enacted by the Indian Legislature. The Government of India Act, 1915, was amended in 1916, and under the amended sub-s. (3), s. 114, the office of the acting Advocate-General was for the first time created and recognized. It is clear therefore that the only ground of the judgment of the Division Bench in 1865 no longer survives.

The next question is what is the position of the acting Advocate-General. To determine this one must look at s. 114, Government of India Act, 1915, as amended by the Act of 1916, and at the Bar Councils Act 1926 as amended in 1927. Now under the amended s. 114, Government of India Act, it is clear that the person appointed to act as Advocate-General has all the powers which the permanent incumbent of that office has either under the Government of India Act, or under similar Statutes prior to it.

Whatever the position in England as to the rank, seniority and privileges of members of the Bar may be, it is clear from the Bar Councils Act that the question as to the appointment of Advocates, their rights and privileges, and their seniority are to be determined under the Indian Bar Councils Act and under that Act alone. In England the right of audience in Court is conferred by the Inns of Court and the right of pre-audience or precedence is conferred by the Crown. But in this country after the passing of the Indian Bar Councils Act, these questions of audience as well as precedence have to be answered only in accordance with the provisions of the Bar Councils Act. It is not suggested and cannot be suggested that the Bar Councils Act is ultra vires, having regard to the provisions of s. 84, Government of India Act, 1915. Section 8, Bar Councils Act, lays down the manner in which Advocates are to be enrolled. This section was amended in 1927 and sub-s. 4, s. 8, now lays down the rules for determining the respective rights of precedence of the Advocates enrolled under the Act. Sub-s. (4) runs as follows:

"The respective right of pre-audience of Advocates of the High Court shall be determined by seniority:

Provided that the Advocate-General shall have pre-audience over all other Advocates. . . ."

The main argument, as I understand it, on behalf of the Bar Association and the Bombay Bar Council, is that the privilege which is granted to the Advocate-General under this section is a personal privilege and does not attach to the office. I am unable to find in the language used in sub-s. (4), s. 8, Bar Councils Act, and in s. 114, Government of India Act, that the rights and privileges of the Advocate-General are personal in the sense that they can be enjoyed by him independently of the office which he holds. As a matter of fact the Letters Patent of Sir Jamshedji Kanga have been produced before us. They show that his appointment was for five years in the first instance and was liable to be renewed. Supposing at the end of five years Sir Jamshedji Kanga is not re-appointed, what becomes of his so-called personal privilege? Does he continue to enjoy the privilege of pre-audience conferred upon him by the proviso to sub-s. (4), s. 8, Bar Councils Act, even if he vacates the office which he is holding? A personal privilege, in my opinion, is a privilege which is capable of being enjoyed by the person on whom it is conferred, independently of any official position in connexion with which it was conferred, until recalled or revoked by appropriate proceedings. As an example of a personal privilege, I may refer to the practice of the Crown granting patents of precedence to members of the Bar in England. These patents expressly provided that the grantees should have a right of precedence after a particular Barrister named in the patents.

The next question is whether the person who is appointed to act in the temporary vacancy of the Advocate-General is entitled to the same privileges conferred by the Bar Councils Act on the permanent incumbent of that office. Now when a Statute confers a power or imposes a duty then, unless a contrary intention appears, the power may be exercised and duty performed from time to time as occasion arises, and when the power is so conferred or the duty imposed on the holder of the office as such, it may be exercised or performed by the holder for the time being. No authority is necessary for this proposition, but if one is needed, I may refer to s. 32 (1) of the English Interpretation Act (1889), 52 and 53 Vic. c. 63.

The Government of India Act 1915, as amended by the Act of 1916, is also to the same effect, and it is not disputed that the acting Advocate-General has in the past been exercising the powers and performing the duties attached to the office of the Advocate-General. Now there are several Statutes which confer special powers on the Advocate-General, some of which are in the nature of rights or privileges. It is not necessary to examine in detail these Statutes, but reference may be made to the Civil Procedure Code, the Criminal Procedure Code, and lastly, the Bar Councils Act. Taking the last Act, as is pointed out by my Lord the Chief Justice, it is difficult to see how the acting Advocate-General can perform or can exercise some of the duties and rights which are conferred upon him under the Bar Councils Act, or how the Act can be worked as to some of its provisions unless you read into the word "Advocate-General", wherever it occurs, the words "acting Advocate General" or "the person lawfully appointed to exercise the office of the Advocate-General during the temporary absence of the permanent incumbent". As a general rule, a word I think is to be construed throughout a Statute in the same sense. Therefore, if you read the words 'acting Advocate-General' into the words "Advocate-General", in say s. 4 or s. 12, Bar Councils Act, I am unable to see why it could not be read into the word "Advocate-General" in sub s (4), s. 8, Bar Councils Act.

A reasonable construction should, if possible, prevail and it must not be assumed that Legislature foresees every result which may accrue from the use of a particular word; and yet effect must be given to every part of the Statute even if the consequence be a hardship on some individuals. Where the meaning, the object and the spirit of a Statute are clear from the title, preamble or otherwise, it should not be reduced to a nullity by a literal following of the language or the words used, which may be due to a want of skill on the part of the draftsman, and in certain circumstances it is permissible to supply the omitted words or expressions. These rules of construction are well recognized. In my opinion judicial interpretation should be directed to avoiding consequences which are inconvenient and should be such as would in effect carry out the intention and spirit of the Act. As pointed out by the learned Chief Justice, to adopt the reading of sub-s. (4), s. 8, Bar Councils Act, insisted upon by Mr. Colman, would be to reduce the Act to a nullity in some respects. Further, if the acting Advocate-General cannot claim precedence under the subsection, it is difficult to see how, in view of the precise and definite rule laid down therein he can be allowed, as he always has been, precedence in respect of Crown business.

The next argument is that the expression

"Advocate-General," as defined in s. 2, Bar Councils Act, does not include the acting Advocate-General. It is further contended that if the Legislature intended to place the acting Advocate-General in the same position as the permanent incumbent of the office of the Advocate-General, they would have said so in s. 2. Now s. 2 does not purport to define the expression "Advocate-General." It simply lays down that certain persons or officers are included in the expression "Advocate-General." This became necessary by reason of the well-known fact that in several provinces the principal law officers are described in different ways. It is only in the three major Presidencies that the principal law officer is called the "Advocate-General." In some provinces he is known as the "Government Advocate" and in others the "Government Pleader" and so on.

It is undoubtedly true that there are some Statutes in which a person who is appointed to act for a permanent incumbent of a particular office is specifically given the powers and the privileges attached to the office. But we have to take the Act as a whole and to construe it in the light and spirit of the Act. It is not permissible to attribute ignorance to the Legislature of the fact that the Advocate General may remain absent either on leave or deputation or a vacancy may arise by reason of the death or resignation, and that under the Government of India Act a person may be appointed to act in his place, and it seems to me that the very fact that the Legislature have not specifically referred to the acting Advocate-General in s. 2, Bar Councils Act, is an argument in favour of the construction we are placing on sub-s. (4), s. 8, Bar Councils Act.

Another contention is with regard to a possible conflict which may arise in the event of the permanent holder of the office and the acting Advocate General being present in the Court or in the Presidency at the same time. The answer to that however is provided by the provisions of sub-s. (3), s. 114, Government of India Act, 1915. It is clear from that sub section that the appointment of the acting Advocate-General lasts until the Advocate General, i. e., the permanent incumbent of the office, has returned from his absence or deputation or until the acting appointment is cancelled. Therefore once a person is appointed to act in place of the permanent holder of the office of the Advocate-General, the office is legally full until the appointment is terminated, and until then the duties of the office can only be discharged by the acting incumbent.

Reading the Bar Councils Act as a whole, I have come to the conclusion that it was the intention of the Legislature to include the acting Advocate-General in the expression "Advocate-General" wherever it occurs, and I, therefore agree with the order proposed by my Lord the Chief Justice.

Barlee, J.—In view of what has been said by his Lordship the Chief Justice and my learned brother Rangnekar, I have very little to say. It is clear law that privileges once conferred can only be taken away by the clear words of a Statute or by necessary implication. There are no clear words here and we have to see whether there is any necessary implication in the Bar Councils Act that the term "Advocate-General" wherever used in that Act includes the term "Acting Advocate-General." I think that such an implication can be found. I refer only to s. 4 and s. 12 of the Act which have been referred to by my Lord the Chief Justice. These are important sections of the Act, s. 12 being amongst the most important since it occurs among the sections dealing with disciplinary action. Now s. 4, sub s. (1), says that every Bar Council shall consist of fifteen members of whom one shall be the Advocate-General. If we turn to s. 114, Government of India Act, 1915, we find that this is incomplete as it stands because the acting Advocate-General has all the powers of an Advocate-General for the time being and has the power of voting at the Bar Council. In the case of a public officer I think that powers include rights, and therefore in my opinion the section rightly interpreted means the Advocate-General or the Acting Advocate-General. In s. 12 it is enacted that notice must be given to the "Advocate-General." For similar reasons I think this must mean the Advocate-General or the Acting Advocate-General. To hold otherwise, it seems to me, would mean that the Bar Councils Act by implication amends s. 114, Government of India Act and that s. 114 must run:

"the person so appointed may exercise the powers of an Advocate-General with the exception of those powers which are given under the Bar Councils Act."

This cannot be implied. So we must adopt the alternative and suppose that when the Legislature referred to the Advocate-General in these sections of the Bar Councils Act, it meant to include an Acting Advocate-General. It is a general rule that a word must be interpreted in the same sense in every part of an Act, and it follows that the term "Advocate-General" in s. 8 includes the term "Acting Advocate-General." I agree, therefore, with the order proposed by my Lord the Chief Justice.

AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENT.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17 (1) (b)—
'Declare,' meaning of—Document acknowledging a right —Registration, necessity of—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 19, Arts. 142, 144—Discontinuance of possession—Possession not resumed—Article applicable.

The word 'declare' in s. 17, Registration Act, implies a declaration of will, not a mere statement of fact. A document which merely acknowledges as a fact that a right is vested in a particular person, does not require registration. Sakha Ram Krishnaji v. Madan Krishnaji (2), Jivan Ali Beg v. Basa Mal (3), Rungana-yaki Ammal v. Virupaksh Rao Naidu (4), Baldeo Singh v. Udal Singh (5), Ariff v. Dawood (6) and Subramonian v. Lutchman (7), referred to. Faki v. Khotu (1), overruled. [p. 800, col. 2.]

In the case of an acknowledgment contained in a communication addressed to a third party registration is not practicable nor required. [p. 801, col. 1.]

A proprietor to whom the estate had been released and made over under the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, made a gift of a portion of the estate to his wife in 1909 without the sanction of the Commissioner and delivered possession to her. In 1916 the wife filed a petition to the Commissioner referring to the gift and requesting that the Commissioner may be pleased to sanction the gift or order a fresh grant on the same terms to be executed. The donor died in 1924 and his grandson filed a suit for possession in 1924 against the widow and her transferees:

Held, (i) that the suit was governed by Art. 142 and not 144 of Sch. I, of the Limitation Act; [p. 799, col. 2.]

(ii) that the petition filed by the wife contained a clear acknowledgment of the title of her husband within the meaning of s. 19, Limitation Act; [p. 800, col. 1.]

(iii) that the petition did not declare any right in favour of the husband and was not compulsorily registrable under s. 17 (1), Registration Act. [p. 801, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the High Court of Judicature at Patna, dated 11th January, 1929, affirming the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Hazaribagh, dated the 26th April, 1926.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and W. Wallach, for the Appellant.

Messrs. L. De Gruyther, K. C. and M. A. Jinnah, for the Respondents.

Viscount Dunedin—This is an appeal from a decree of the High Court of Judicature at Patna, dated the 9th January 1929, which affirmed a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Hazaribagh, dated the 26th April, 1926, dismissing the plaintiff-appellant's suit.

Thakur Jadu Charan Singh, the plaintiff's grand-father, was the owner of the impartible estate known as the Dhargulli Estate, in the District of Hazaribagh. He was heavily in debt, and by an order passed under s. 2, of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act (VI of 1876) in 1894, the management of the whole of his estate was vested in a Manager appointed under that Act. The management of the estate continued under the Act until the 15th May, 1909, when the estate was released and made over to him according to the provisions of the Act.

Section 12-A, paras, 1, 2 and 3 of the Act provide:

"12-A—(1) When the possession and enjoyment of property is restored, under the circumstances mentioned in the first or the third clause of s. 12, to the person who was the holder of such property when the application under s. 2 was made, such person shall not be competent, without the previous sanction of Commissioner—

"(a) to alienate such property or any part thereof, in any way, or

"(b) to create any charge thereon extending beyond his life time.

"(2) If the Commissioner refuses to sanction any such alienation or charge, an appeal shall lie to the Board of Revenue, whose decision shall be final.

"(3) Every alienation and charge made or attempted in contravention of sub-s. (1) shall be void."

In 1909 Jadu Omaran Singh, without having obtained any sanction from the Commissioner, executed a deed of gift of certain lands in favour of his second wife, who is now his widow and the respondent in this appeal. She entered into possession of these lands and was in possession up to 1920, when she transferred the lands to her son, also a respondent in this appeal. Jadu Charan Singh died on the 21st February 1924. His eldest son being dead, he was succeeded in the estate by his grandson, the plaintiff-appellant. The present suit was instituted by him on the 24th February 1925 and sought to recover the lands which had been transferred without sanction in 1909. The only effective defence was under the Limitation Act, and this defence was found to be good by the Subordinate Judge and by the Court of Appeal, and the suit was dismissed. Both these courts held that it was a case of adverse possession and therefore fell within Art. 144 of the First Schedule of the Limitation Act of 1908. In their Lordships' view, inasmuch as it has been found as a fact that after the deed of 1909 the late Thakur discontinued his possession and never resumed it, it is rather a case which falls within s. 142. The result, however, is the same if the 12 years run from 1909. But the appellant pleads that the 12 years do not run from 1909, owing to the following facts. In March 1916, the Thakur filed a petition with the Commissioner in which he related the deed of gift to his wife, expressed a doubt as to whether the deed of gift was valid, and asked the Commissioner either to declare that the deed was valid or to give his sanction to the execution of a fresh deed of gift. At the same time the wife, present respondent, filed a petition in these terms—

"The humble petition of Thakurain Jagarnath Kuari, wife of Thakur Jado Charan Singh, proprietor of Gadi Dhurgulli, Parganna Rampore, District Hazaribagh. Most respectfully sheweth—

"That in view of the petition filed by Thakur Jado Charan Singh, your petitioners beg to file the original deed of gift and prays that your Honour may be pleased to sanction the same or order a fresh grant on the same terms to be executed."

This petition was signed by herself.

Section 19 of the Limitation Act is as follows:—

"19.—(1) Where before the expiration of the period prescribed for a suit or application in respect of any property or right, an acknowledgment of liability in respect of such property or right has been made in writing signed by the party against whom such property or right is claimed, or by some person through whom he derives title or liability, a fresh period of limitation shall be computed from the time when the acknowledgment was so signed.

"Explanation 1.—For the purposes of this section an acknowledgment may be sufficient though it omits to specify the exact nature of the property or right, or avers that the time for payment, delivery, performance or enjoyment has not yet come, or is accompanied by a refusal to pay, deliver, perform or permit to enjoy, or is coupled with a claim to a set-off, or is addressed to a person other than the person entitled to the property or right."

The appellant urges that this is an acknowledgment of liability in terms of the section and that therefore the period of limitation only began in 1916, and 12 years had not elapsed when the suit was raised in 1925. Both the Subordinate Judge and the Judges of the High Court disposed of this in a single sentence by simply saying they found no much acknowledgment. Their Lordships are unable to agree with this view. The petition produces the deed of gift and asks that it may be sanctioned or that a fresh grant may be ordered. This is a clear acknowledgment that unless one of the two things is done, she has no title at all, or, in other words, that she recognizes that the title is in the Thakur, her husband, and not in herself.

The Subordinate Judge, however, raised another point. He says that the acknowledgment contained in the petition, not being registered, cannot be received in evidence, and he quotes in support of this the case of Faki v. Khotu (1). The section of the Registration Act on which the question depends in s. 17 (1), which is as follows :—

"The following documents shall be registered, if the property to which they relate is situate in a district in which, and if they have been executed on or after the date on which Act No. XVI of 1864, or the Indian Registration Act, 1866, or the Indian Registration Act, 1871, or the Indian Registration Act, 1877, or this Act came or comes into force, namely:—

"(b) other non-testamentary instruments which purport or operate to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish, whether in present or in future, any right, title or interest whether vested or contingent of the value of one hundred rupees and upwards, to or in immoveable property."

Now the case of Faki v. Khotu (1), undoubtedly goes the whole length that the respondents desire. It was a case where limitation was pleaded. The judgment on page 593, after reciting the document in question, goes on thus:

"The plaintiff wishes to use it (i. e., the document) as an admission or acknowledgment of his title to the lands, and as proof that, at the date of the document, the defendant's possession was not adverse to him. The document undoubtedly contains such an acknowledgment; and if it be genuine and relevant, a court, which had to determine the question of fact, would probably consider that acknowledgment sufficient proof that the defendant's possession was really the plaintiff's position.....

"The Assistant Judge has held that the document is inadmissible in evidence, because it is not registered; and we are of opinion that this decision is right. The plaintiff wishes to use the document as an acknowledgment of a right, title and interest in immoveable property, which is admittedly of a higher value than one hundred rupees. If admitted it will 'operate to declare' such a right, title and interest and it thus appears to come within the terms of s. 17 of Act XX of 1866."

But the question remains whether that case was rightly decided. Their Lordships are of opinion that it was not and that it was inconsistent with a long track of decisions which are incompatible with it. The first of these will be found in the case of Sakha Ram Krishnaji v. Madan Krishnaji (2). The question there was as to a document in the following words :—

"Our eldest brother M has built houses and is building new houses on property appertaining to his share.... To the same we three persons and our heirs and representatives have no interest of any kind whatever. If we or they should prefer any claim, then the same is to be null. This release paper we have duly passed in writing jointly and severally and in sound mind."

The document had not been registered, and it was objected that it could not be put in evidence in order to contradict a witness. Dealing with it West, J., said:

"Here.... the document is not itself one which declares a right in immoveable property, in the sense probably intended by s. 27. There 'declare' is placed along with 'create', 'assign', 'limit' or 'extinguish' a right, title or interest, and these words imply a definite change of legal relation to the property by an expression of will embodied in the document referred to. I think this is equally the case with the word 'declare.' It implies a declaration of will, not a mere statement of fact and thus a deed of partition, which causes a change of legal relation to the property divided amongst all the parties to it, is a declaration in the intended sense, but a letter containing an admission, direct or inferential, that a partition once took place, does not 'declare' a right within the meaning of the section."

Now it is quite clear in comparing these two cases that they took diametrically opposite views as to the proper meaning of the word "declare" in the s. 17 and it is upon that point that the whole question turns. Subsequent decisions have given full effect to the view of West J., in the Krishnaji's case (2)

In the case of Jiwan Ali Beg v. Basamal (3) the head note accurately sets forth one of the points in the case:—

"An instrument to come within s. 17 (b) of the Registration Act (III of 1877) must in itself purport or operate to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish some right, title or interest of the value of Rs. 100 or upwards in immovable property."

Then in the case of Kunganayaki Ammal v. Virupakshee Rao Naidu (4), the learned Judge in the High Court expressly cites the words of West, J., in the Krishnaji's case (2), and in the case of Baldeo Singh v. Udai Singh (5), precisely the same thing is done

Their Lordships have no doubt that this track of decision is right. Though the word "declare" might be given a wider meaning, they are satisfied that the view originally taken by West, J. is right. The distinction is between a mere recital of a fact and something which in itself creates a title. The distinction has been acted on in cases connected with mortgages by deposit of documents of title. A comparison of the case of Ariff v. Dawool (6), with that of Subramonian v. Lutchman (7), will show that, according to this distinction, a document requires registration or not. In the present case the statement in the petition of the respondent did not create any right in the Thakur. It merely acknowledged as a fact that such right was his. There was, therefore, no necessity for registration. It is not out of place to remark that this exactly fits in with explanation 1. If you take the case of an acknowledgment contained in a communication addressed to a third party registration is not practicable; it is scarcely conceivable that it could be required.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty to allow the appeal and to set aside the decrees of both the courts below with costs, and in lieu thereof that judgment ought to be entered for the appellant. The respondents will pay the costs of the appeal.

Landlord and tenant—Permanent tenancy—Execution of lease for fixed term after negotiation and intervention—Compromise of doubtful claim—Assertion of hostile title—Acquisition of permanent tenancy—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Res judicata—The questions not before Court in previous suit—Effect on subsequent suit.

A person in possession of land under a tenancy for a fixed term cannot by a mere assertion in a judicial proceeding during the period of tenancy and the lapse of twelve years without that assertion having been successfully challenged obtain a title as a permanent title. Kamakhya Narayan Singh v. Ram Raksha Singh (11) and Bhailal v. Kalansang (12), followed. Dhanna Mal v. Moti Sagar (10), distinguished. [p. 805, cols. 1 & 2.]

The plaintiff landlord instituted a suit for the ejectment of his tenants on the expiration of the term of the lease i. e., 25 years after its execution in 1897. The lease was the result of negotiations for 8 years and intervention of political authorities. The lease provided for enhanced rent and restriction on cultivation of lands, planting of trees and erection of buildings. The tenants gave up any right to continue as tenants after the expiry of the lease. In the suit the tenants objected to their ejectment on the ground that they were permanent tenants in spite of the lease:

Held, that the defendants were not permanent tenants and the lease was binding on the parties and their family members as a compromise of a doubtful claim.

Second Civil Appeal against the decision of the First Class Sub-Judge, Ratnagiri, in Appeals Nos. 180 and 191 of 1926.

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Appellant.

Messrs. H. C. Coyajee and J. G. Rele, for Respondent No. 1.

Baker, J.—The plaintiff, the Sar Desai of Sawantwadi, sued thirty-three defendants for possession of the property in suit after removal of the buildings which defendants had built on the land, for arrears of rent, and for costs, alleging that the property which belongs to the Sawantwadi State was leased for twenty-five years, from 1st April 1897, to one Narayan Venku Kargutkar, who is the ancestor of the Hindu defendants, and one Farsoo Niklu, who is the ancestor of defendants Nos. 10 to 12. The other defendants held under these defendants. The defendants set up various pleas of permanent tenancy, limitation, and so forth, and claimed compensation. The first Court, the Subordinate Judge of Vengurla, awarded plaintiff possession as against defendants Nos. 1 to 17 and the heirs of defendant No. 18, but dismissed his suit as against the Christian defendants other than defendants Nos. 2 to 16, who were held to be ancient tenants of their portion liable to pay rent to the plaintiff according to the custom of the country under s. 83, Bombay Land Revenue Code.

Two appeals were preferred against this decree, one by the Kargutkar defendants against them, and one by the plaintiff against the dismissal of his suit as against the Christian defendants already referred to. Both these appeals were dismissed by the District Court of Ratnagiri. No second appeal has been made by the plaintiff as against the dismissal of his appeal, but defendant No. 17 and the heirs of defendant No. 18 have appealed to this Court.

We are not now concerned with the case of the Christian tenant, but only with the family of Kargutkar. The lease in question was passed by Narayan Venkaji Kargutkar. The genealogy will show that he had two brothers Yesu and Krishna. Yesu had two sons, Venkaji, defendant No. 16 and Shankar, defendant No. 17; and Krishna, who is defendant No. 18, had four sons. The present appellants are defendant No. 17 and the sons of defendant No. 18. Defendant No. 1 has not appealed.

The principal points which arise in this appeal are four: firstly, whether the lease of 1897 passed by Narayan has the effect of negating any claim on his part to be a permanent tenant of the lands in suit; secondly, if so whether it is binding on his co-sharers and their descendants, i. e., the present appellants; thirdly, whether the claim to be permanent tenants set up by the appellants is res judicata; and fourthly, whether the appellants are entitled to any compensation for the houses which they have built on the land. The findings of fact of the Courts below are: firstly, that Narayan and his brothers Yesu and Krishna were joint, and Narayan was the manager of the family. And it appears that the present appellants still live with defendant No. 1. Vithal who is the son of Narayan, who, as I have said, has not appealed. The lower Appellate Court held that both the Kargutkar defendants and the Christian defendants were permanent tenants under the presumption arising under s. 83, Bombay Land Revenue Code, the origin of their tenancy being lost in antiquity; but by reason of the lease Ex. 80 passed by Narayan and by Niklu who was the ancestor of defendants Nos. 10 to 12, the claim of these persons to be permanent tenants was extinguished. This did not apply to the other Christian defendants who were not bound by the acts of their ancestor and therefore their rights were unaffected by this lease; but as I have said, they are not parties to this appeal and we are not concerned with them. The lease which is dated 5th December 1897 but takes effect from 1st April 1897. was for twenty-five years, and therefore expired on 31st March 1922. That lease contains an admission that the executants i. e., Narayan and Farsu, are annual tenants, and it also contains clauses by which they bind themselves to vacate the land at the expiry of the period of the lease.

It has been argued by the learned Counsel for the appellants that this is not inconsistent with permanent tenancy, and that the execution of this lease cannot operate to do away with the permanency of the tenancy which the executants had already acquired by reason of their long possession, and in support of that proposition he has relied mainly on two cases, one of which is a case between the same plaintiff and other defendants relating to land in the same place, i. e., Vengurla, and that is the well-known case of Raghunath v. Lakshuman (1) and the other case on which he has relied is the case of 59 Ind. Cas. 278, Ram Ranchod Abdul Rahim (2). I do not think it is necessary to give the details of the kabliuyat, which is a long document, but it will be necessary to give the facts which led up to the execution of this kabuliyat. Now it appears that about the year 1889 there were disputes between the Savantwadi State and its tenants with regard to the amount of rent to be recovered from them, and in that year certain of the tenants including Narayan made an application to the Bombay Government dated 19th October 1888, saying that the assessment of the thikans occupied by them was Rs. 1,432 odd, but the Savantwadi State was demanding Rs. 800 odd in addition, and asking Government to interfere and order the State to accept the assessment fixed by the Revenue Survey Settlement. In consequence of this petition certain steps were taken by the political authorities, and we find a letter from the Political Superintendent, Sawantwadi in October 1889 saying that the Karbhari of Savantwadi had offered to grant leases to the petitioners for thirty years from 1884-1885, the year of the Survey Settlement, on condition that an extra rent of Rs. 300 a year was paid and recommending that that settlement should be accepted as being equitable to both parties. And this was sanctioned by Government by a resolution of 13th December 1889. It appears, however, that this settlement was not at once brought into operation, and the subsequent events are narrated in the preamble of the kabuliyat which is Ex. 80 dated, as I have already said, 5th December, 1897. The executants, i. e., Narayan and Farsu, say that in August 1889 they had appeared before the karbhari and expressed their willingness to pay the enhanced rent and to pass a kabuliyat.

And that is probably what led to the reference in the Political Agent's letter referred to above as to the offer made by the State authorities being equitable to both parties and acceptable to the tenants. It appears however that nothing was done up till 1897, and then there was a fresh interview between the tenants and the Political Superintendent, and the kabuliyat in question was passed. It will be seen, therefore, that the tenants took eight years to consider the matter, and that the intervention of the political authorities was twice necessitated, once in 1889, and once about 1897, and in the face of that I do not know how it can be argued with reference to other cases which are based on different facts that there was any question of the tenants being unaware of what the arrangement was into which they were entering. This kabuliyat is for 25 years. It imposes restrictions with regard to the cultivation of the thikans, the planting of trees and the erection of buildings, and at the end of the last paragraph of cl. 9 and cl. 14 the executing tenants expressly give up any right to have the land continued to them after the expiry of the period of the lease. In the face of this, even supposing that they were permanent tenants before, it can only be held that they gave up their permanent tenancy by arriving at a compromise with the State authorities. The learned Advocate for the appellants has relied on, as I have said two cases: one, in 59 Ind. Cas. 278 Ram Ranchod v. Abdul Rahim (2) and the other case arising between similar parties in Raghunath v. Lakshuman (1). In Raghunath v. Lakshuman (1) which was a test case brought by the Savantwadi State in which they failed, Sir Lawrence Jenkins, after referring to the various documents in the case came to the conclusion that in spite of the clause in one kabuliyat passed by one of the tenants agreeing to make over the land to the State at the expiry of the current year questions of this character cannot be determined by a clause such as the present but that the matter must be judged in the light of the actual facts, and referring to the case of Gangaji v. Sakharam (3), he held:—

"There the determining point was the fact that the tenants still continued to hold and that is what has happened here."

If the present case is judged in the light of the facts it will be seen that there was a dispute between the tenants and the landlord, i. e., the State, that the State wanted to enhance the rent that the tenants then 'approached the Bombay Government as the paramount power, that the political authorities intervened, and by an arrangement between the parties it was settled that the lease should be given for 25 years at a slightly enhanced rent and that was accepted by the tenants, who undertook to give up the land at the end of that period. The case in Ram Ranchod v. Abdul Rahim (2) relied on by the learned Advocate for the appellants, is a case in which a tenant had been in possession of the land as far as memory went but in one year he executed a rent-note for one year but continued in possession as before paying throughout the same amount of rent, and it was held that this was not sufficient to rebut the presumption of the permanency of the tenancy which arose from its antiquity. Now it would be seen that in both these cases there was an admission of annual tenancy, but in spite of that the tenants continued in possession as before. In the present case there was no question of one rent note acknowledging an annual tenancy, but we have a lease entered into after protracted negotiation between the parties by which the tenants were confirmed in undisturbed possession of the land for a period of 25 years, and that being so, if the case is decided on the surrounding facts, in my opinion, the view of both the courts below that a compromise of this nature does away with the permanency of the defendants is correct. It has been argued by the learned Advocate for the appellants that the only dispute between the parties being as to the amount of rent it was not necessary to incorporate any provisions as to the duration of the tenancy in the rent-note. But I am unable to accept this position. When once there was a dispute between the parties when the question of a settlement arose other terms might be incorporated in the settlement.

It is to be observed that the date of this dispute was some years prior to the decision in Raghunath v. Lakshuman (1) and as has been pointed out by the learned Judge of the court below, nobody knew whether the State would be successful against the tenants or not in ejectment suits which as matter of fact were brought against a number of the tenants. The binding nature of a compromise such as this has been laid down in numerous cases. The learned Counsel for the respondent has referred to Story's Equity Jurisprudence Edn 3, para. 131, and to a case Varajlal Shivlal v. Dalsukh Varajlal (4), which says that defendants would be estopped from contesting it. It is not possible to say what the result of a suit by the State against the executants of this lease to eject them from the land or to recover enhanced rent would have been and taking the right of the State to be doubtful, the compromise between the parties will none the less be valid. The learned Counsel has further referred to the case of Stapilton v. Stapilton (5), laying down that the compromise of a doubtful right is a sufficient foundation of an agreement. This will also dispose of the question of whether the agreement entered into by Narayan will bind his brothers, i. e., the fathers of the present appellants, defendants Nos. 17 and 18. The learned Judge of the court below has found that the compromise was for the benefit of the family because but for it the State would have tried to evict them from the land, and in view of the cases quoted which I have just referred, the compromise would be binding on the other members of the family. I will go so far as to say that it was for their benefit, inasmuch as the State, which at that time was demanding an enhanced rent, confirmed the tenants in their possession of the land for a further period of 25 years at a rate of rent which was not so much enhanced. The case of Narayan v. Political Agent, Sawantwadi (6) was not a case in which the compromise was of doubtful rights but one in which the person executing the kabuliyat had surrendered a permanent tenancy in exchange for a tenancy for a fixed term of 25 years. In that case, therefore, the permanent tenancy was held proved, whereas in 1889, or rather in 1897, the permanent tenancy of the present tenants was not proved, and it was not possible to say what the result of litigation would be. In these circumstances, I am of opinion that the compromise which was entered into between Narayan and the State (I omit the name of Niklu—he is not a party to the proceedings) was for the benefit of his co sharers, and in view of the cases quoted above, this compromise must be held binding.

The next point which has been raised by the learned Advocate for the appellants is that the question of the lease being binding on his clients is res judicata by reason of the judgment in Suit No. 207 of 1907 of the Vengurla Subordinate Judge's Court. That was a suit by the present plaintiff against Vithal Narayan, i. e., present defendant No 1, Yesu the father of defendants Nos. 16 and 17, and defendant No. 18 Krishna, and two of the Christian defendants to recover rent under the kabuliyat. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in that suit representing defendants Nos. 16 to 18 in this suit pleaded that they were not liable to pay rent to the plaintiff, because they used to pay their share of rent to defendant No. 1's father who paid to plaintiff. Issues Nos. 2 and 3 in that case were: Is the kabuliyat not binding on defendants? Does it bind defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3? And the finding was that it is binding on defendants Nos. 1, 4 and 5. Hence it is contended that the court in that case decided that the kabuliyat was not binding on the ancestors of the present appellants and, therefore, it cannot be held to bind them. That case was a rent suit and, what was claimed was rent. No question of ejectment arose, and on reference to the reasons for the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge which are at page 32 of the record, what he says is as follows:—

"As plaintiff has based his suit on a written contract and as defendant No. 1 has undertaken to pay the balance of rent on the ground that all co-sharers used to pay the rent to his father and after him to defendant No. 1 and that as his father and himself used to pay the whole rent to plaintiff, I am constrained to hold that suit is not bad for want of parties and that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are not personally liable."

This at the most amounts to a finding that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 who are the ancestors of the present appellants are not personally liable for the rent because they used to pay it to defendant No. 1 who paid it to the plaintiff. It is in no sense a finding that the kabuliyat in so far as it deals with the non-permanent nature of the tenancy is not binding on defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in that case. That point was not before the court and was not necessary for the determination of the suit. The learned Counsel for the respondent has referred to a number of cases on this point in which it was held that where a point was not necessary for the decision of the suit, a finding on that point would not be res judicata. He has referred to the cases of Bai Nathi v. Narshi Dullabh (7), Surrendra Nath v. Kamakhya Narain Singh (8), Midnapur Zamindari Co v. Naresh Narayan Roy (9) and Dhanna Mal v. Moti Sagar (10). The present case, however, is somewhat different to the cases which have been quoted. The question which is now at issue between the parties, i. e., the nature of the tenancy created under Ex. 80, the kabuliyat was not before the court at all, nor was it considered. The fact that defendants Nos 2 and 3, by reason of their paying the rent to defendant No 1, the eldest brother, who then paid it to plaintiff, were not liable to pay rent to the plaintiff directly has no bearing upon the question of the whether they are entitled to remain in possession of the land after the expiry of the period fixed by the lease. I agree, therefore, with the finding of the lower Appellate Court that the suit is not barred by reason of res judicata.

Then it has been contended by the learned Advocate for the appellants that under the Statute of Limitations the present appellants have acquired a status of permanent tenants by reason of their assertion of an adverse title for a period of more than 12 years, and he has referred to the case of Kamakhya Narayan Singh v. Ram Raksha Singh (11), which is an entirely different case to the present, the facts being that after the expiry of the lease or the death of the lessee his heirs held over against the will of the landlord and without paying him any rent, and obviously has no application to the present case where the tenants were entitled under the lease Ex. 80 to hold the land for a period of 25 years which only expired in 1922, the present suit being brought in 1924. There is a case directly in point, Bhailal v. Khalsang (12), which refers to the Privy Council case in Mohammad Mumtaz Ali Khan v. Mohan Singh (13), where the Privy Council say that they are (p. 209 of 50 I. A.):

"unable to affirm as a general proposition of law that a person who is, in fact, in possession of land under a tenancy or occupancy title can, by a mere assertion in a judicial proceeding and the lapse of 6 or 13 years without that assertion having been successfully challenged, obtain a title as an under-proprietor to the lands."

The assertion of the title of the appellants is presumably made in the suit of 1907 already referred to. The plaintiff was successful in obtaining a decree for rent against defendants Nos. 1, 4 and 5. The lease at that time had still 15 years to run, and the fact that the plaintiff did not think it necessary to bring a suit under s. 42, Specific Relief Act, in order to contest the statement that the defendants were permanent tenants would not, in virtue of the Privy Council decision just referred to, give rise to a starting point of limitation which would enable the defendants to count adverse possession from that date, and so perfect a title of permanent tenancy.

The sole remaining point is as to the right of the defendants to compensation for buildings on the land. The kabuliyat expressly provides that any buildings on the land erected after its date should be liable to removal without compensation. But it is contended that there are buildings on the land erected by them prior to the commencement of the kabuliyat in April, 1897, for which they are entitled to compensation, and in support of that proposition reliance is placed on the deposition of the plaintiffs' clerk as to the existence of buildings on the land prior to that date. That deposition, which is Ex. 149, was read. The witness says he was appointed as karkun by plaintiff there in the year 1912. Any buildings standing on the land at the time when he was appointed cannot be said to be proved to have been erected before the year 1897. As a matter of fact there is no evidence as to when these buildings were erected or by whom they were erected or what the cost of erecting them was, and in this state of the evidence I am not prepared to hold on the evidence of a man whose acquaintance with the land began in 1912 that it is proved that the buildings on the land have stood there from ancient times and that any compensation should be awarded in respect of them.

The result is that the decree of the lower Appellate Court is confirmed, and the appeal dismissed with costs payable to respondent No. 1.

Arbitration Act (IX of 1899), s. 14—Objection to award for want of valid reference—Objections disallowed—Fresh suit to set aside award, competency of.

A party in his objection to an award under s. 14, Arbitration Act, can make an objection which challenges the factum of the reference so far as he is concerned and which goes to the root of the jurisdiction of the arbitration and it is within the jurisdiction of the court to hear this objection. Pokar Das v. Forbes, Campbell & Co. Ltd. (12), relied on. Jai Narain Babu Lal v. Narain Das Jaini Mal (7), Sushil Chandra Das & Co. v. Sukhamal Bansidhar (9) and E. D. Sassoon v. James Finlay & Co. (14) and Rugunathdas Ramsarup v. Sullyer Bruderar & Co. (15), not followed. [p. 808, cols. 1 & 2.]

A suit is also competent, but if the party elects to file objections under s. 14 and his objections are heard and disallowed, it is not open to him to have the matter inquired into again in a separate suit. Khimji v. Nakhbai (16), followed. [p. 808, col. 2.]

Mr. Tahilram Maniram, for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Kodumal Lakhraj, for the Defendants.

Judgment.—This is a suit filed by the widow and minor sons of one Udhomal, a Hindu, for a declaration that a reference executed by the widow and her brothers in law Narumal and Sobhomal referring certain disputes which they had with one Motumal to arbitration and the award obtained thereon, were void, and for partition by metes and bounds of certain immoveable property and for separate possession of the plaintiffs' share of the same.

One Kundanmal died in 1926 leaving three sons: Udhomal, Narumal, and Sobhomal and certain immoveable property, viz:

(1) Plot Old S. No. 16 Survey sheet A-20, Naper Qr. Karachi, and (2) Plot Old S. No. 21 Survey sheet 21, Napier Qr. Karachi. At the time of his death he was carrying on utensil business in partnership with his three sons.

Udhomal died about 1928 leaving a widow Roohanbai, plaintiff No. 1 and five sons plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 6. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 carried on the utensil business after his death.

On 16th August, 1927, and 21st September, 1928, Udhomal and defendants Nos. 2 and 3 executed mortgage-deed for Rs. 7,000 and Rs. 5,000 repayable in three years from the dates of the mortgage deeds.

Fresh business debts were incurred by defendants Nos. 2 and 3 after the death of Udhomal and an application was made by creditors to have defendants Nos. 2 and 3 adjudicated insolvent and the Official Assignee was appointed interim Receiver.

Thereafter an amicable settlement was arrived at. The plot bearing Old S. No. 21 was sold by defendant and the proceeds divided among the creditors. Plaintiff signed the conveyance deed; she also signed a reference to arbitration of the disputes relating to the mortgage dated 16th August, 1927, and 21st September, 1928, and the non-payment of a hundi executed by defendants Nos. 2 and 3 on behalf of defendant No. 1.

Plaintiff's case is that she signed the reference on her own behalf and on behalf of her children who were minors on the misrepresentation that it was necessary for her to sign it for the purpose of conveying the plot bearing Old S. No. 21 to the purchaser Motumal Tokandas.

The arbitrators held proceedings and passed an award dated 27th June, 1930, which they filed in court.

Plaintiff complains that the arbitrators held proceedings at which she was not represented and that no notice was served on her and she was never informed that proceedings were being held.

She further contends that since the moneys secured by the mortgages had not become payable and the interest had been regularly paid there was no dispute which she was competent to refer on behalf of the minors.

Plaintiff omitted to mention in the plaint that she filed objections to the award of the arbitrators, covering the same ground as her plaint and that the objections were considered and disallowed by my brother Rupchand A. J. O.

On plaintiff's behalf reliance is placed on Dataram Munshi Lal v. Harjimal & Sons (1) as establishing that objections to an award may fall either within or outside the purview of s. 14, Arbitration Act. When a court disallows objections falling within the purview of s. 14, although the doctrine of res judicata is not strictly applicable, the principle of finality will apply to the decree. This principle, however, will not apply where a court assumes jurisdiction, and disallows objections falling outside the purview of s. 14.

It is further contended, that the words "improperly procured", in s. 14 only apply to matters occurring between the reference and the award and that they have no application to anything which has occurred prior to the reference.

The Statute of William 3, cl. 15 (1698) enacted by s. 2 as follows :

"And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid that any arbitration or umpirage procured by corruption or undue means shall be judged and esteemed void and of none effect and accordingly be set aside by any Court of Law or equity so as complaint of such corruption or undue practice be made in the court where the rule is made for submission to such arbitration or umpirage upon the last day of the next term after such arbitration or umpirage made and published to the parties; anything in this Act contained to the contrary notwithstanding".

In Anderson v. Coxeter (2), the court held that under the Statute above referred to nothing was a ground for impeaching the award but manifest corruption of the arbitrators.

Mr. Russell in his commentary on the Law of Arbitration and Award (10th Edition, page 193) observes that the term "undue means" signifies something different from corruption, as for instance the examination of witnesses in the absence of the parties, [In re Plews and Middleton (3) and Harvey v. Shetton (4),] or a refusal to allow the plaintiff a proper opportunity of discussing his case: Spittingue v. Carpenter (5). He adds that the restriction imposed by the language of the Act was subsequently much disregarded for the courts in England listened to applications to set aside awards under the Statute on other grounds than the two enumerated in the section: Veale v. Warner (6). What is more, the courts, in addition to the powers they exercised under Statute, exercise inherent powers of setting aside awards: see Russell Edition 10, page 194. Under the Arbitration Act, 1889, 52 and 53 Vict. 49 the inherent powers of the court were not referred to. The statutory powers of courts to set aside award were extended to cases where an arbitrator or umpire misconducted himself or an arbitration or award had been improperly procured: see s. 11 (2). In s.

14, Arbitration Act IX of 1899, which is largely based on the English Act the grounds for setting aside an award are the same.

In Jai Narain Babu Lal v. Narain Das Jaini Mal (7) doubt was expressed by Sir Shadi Lal, C. J., whether a court, dealing with a private award, under the Arbitration Act, has jurisdiction to determine a dispute as to the factum or the validity of the contract containing the arbitration clause. He observed that there was a divergence of judicial opinion on the question: see pages 311 and 314* and Campbell, J., held that the question whether there was a contract and a valid contract was outside the scope of the arbitration.

Sir Shadi Lal referred inter alia to the case of Matulal Dalmi v. Ramkishin Das Madan Gopal (8) where it was held that when an award is challenged on the ground that there was no submission to arbitration by the parties the remedy lies in a regular suit and not in an application under s. 14, Arbitration Act. No reasons were given by the court for this decision. Walsh, J., in Sushil Chandra Das & Co. v. Sukhamal Bansidhar (9) observed that questions of fact and law upon which the jurisdiction of arbitrators depends are for the courts. It does not follow that an objection which goes to the root of the arbitrators' jurisdiction is not an objection which falls within the purview of s. 14. The court in deciding objections to an award, is not limited to the consideration of questions which are within the jurisdiction of the arbitrator. The arbitrator has no jurisdiction to try the question whether he was corrupt, whether he was guilty of misconduct. The court has jurisdiction to decide such questions as well as the question whether the arbitration was improperly procured. Its jurisdiction is not based upon the consent of the parties: it is statutory and inherent.

Kincaid, J. C., in Sodawaterwala v. Volkart Brothers (10) drew attention to the harm which would be caused to business firms in this Province, if parties were enabled to render the provisions of the Arbitration Act nugatory, by simply alleging that they were misled, or browbeaten, or hypnotized when signing the contract of reference. If he meant by this that a party challenging the jurisdiction of an arbitrator, could not do so by means of a suit, his view was clearly erroneous, since it is in conflict with the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in E. D. Sassoon v. Ramdutt Ramkishen (11), but there appears to be no reason why a speedy remedy should not be available for a person, who complains that an arbitration was improperly procured, because there was no valid reference by reasons of fraud, misrepresentation or mistake if he wishes to avail himself of it. It does no violence to language to say that an arbitration procured in this manner has been improperly procured. No doubt the tenancy in England in ancient times was to construe the statutory powers of courts very strictly and to limit its jurisdiction to set aside awards under 9 William 3, C. 15 to cases of corruption. But the later tendency was for courts to intervene even in cases not provided for by the statute.

In Pokar Das v. Forbes Campbell & Co. Ltd. (12) it was held by Orouch, and Hayward, A. J. O., that when a party elects to proceed against individual members composing a firm any person alleged to be a member and denying his liability as such may, if he likes, appear before the arbitrators under protest and whether he has approved or not he may object to the award being filed against him on the ground that it had been improperly procured against him on the misrepresentation that he was a partner. In other words a party in his objections to the award under s. 14, Arbitration Act, can make an objection which challenges the factum of the reference so far as he is concerned and which goes to the root of the jurisdiction of the arbitration and it is within the jurisdiction of the court to hear this objection: see also Isribai v. Pevibai (13).

Their Lordships of the Privy Council in E. D. Sassoon v. Ramdutt Ramkishen (11) held that a suit is competent when the validity of an alleged agreement to refer is challenged. They did not affirm that that was the only procedure available for a party.

If the party elects to file objections under s. 14, Arbitration Act, with regard to the factum or validity of the alleged reference. I am of opinion, for the reasons, I have mentioned, [that the court has jurisdiction to hear the objection.

The plaintiffs filed objections to the award which covered all the facts on which they rely in the present suit. Raymond, J., in Tayabally Abdul Hussain v. James Finlay & Co. (14) held that a party dissatisfied with a private award could take such objections as the Arbitration Act allowed, and notwithstanding his having done so unsuccessfully, he could thereafter bring a suit to set aside the award on the ground of want of jurisdiction in the arbitrator. This decision was cited with approval in Rugunathdas Ramsarup v. Suldyer Bruderar & Co., (15) at page 47* If by this decision, Raymond A. J. O., meant that a party could under s. 14, Arbitration Act, challenge the validity of the contract and the jurisdiction of arbitration and if unsuccessful, file a suit to set the award aside on the same grounds, with great respect I disagree with the decision.

I agree with the view of Rupchand, A. J. O., in Khimji v. Nathibai (16) where the principle of finality applies to the court's decree with reference to all matters coming within the purview of s. 14, Arbitration Act. A party no doubt has an alternative remedy when his complaint is that owing to the absence of a valid agreement of reference the arbitrator had no jurisdiction to make an award. A suit is competent to set aside the award. But if the party elects to file objections under s. 14 as the plaintiff did with regard to the award in dispute, and his objections are heard and disallowed, it is not open to him in my opinion to have the matter inquired into again in a separate suit.

With reference to issue No. 2, plaintiffs have in fact sued for consequential relief; they have prayed for partition by metes and bounds and for separate possession of property. The objection with regard to s. 42, Specific Relief Act, does not appear to me to be sustainable.

With regard to issue No. 3 under the Court Fees Act, Art. XVII (5), Sch. II, the court fee in a suit to set aside an award was Rs. 10. This fee has now been raised to Rs. 15. For the reasons above set forth with regard to issue No. 1, I dismiss the suit. Defendant No. 1 to have costs.

OPPOSITE PARTY.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 36, 48 and 49—Attachment of moveables—Removal by third person—Suit by attaching creditor—Limitation—Article applicable.

A suit by an attaching creditor against a third person who has removed and misappropriated the attached moveables in collusion with the debtor is governed not by Art. 48 or Art. 49 of the Limitation Act but by Art. 36. Articles 48 and 49 are intended to apply only to cases where the plaintiff had a right to possession of the moveable property concerned. L. P. E. Pugh v. Ashutosh Sen (1), referred to. [p. 809, col. 2.]

First Appeal from an order of the District Judge, Bareilly, dated the 19th January, 1931

Mr. G. S. Pathak, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. M. L. Verma, for the Respondent.

Judgment—This is a defendant's appeal from an order of remand. The plaintiff alleged that he had brought a suit against Sewa Ram and got certain sugar and treacle belonging to his debtor attached before judgment. The present defendant,¹ Kripa Ram, filed an objection to the attachment of the sugar and treacle claiming them as his own property; but his objection was dismissed in April, 1926, and the plaintiff's suit was decreed. Thereupon the present defendant filed another suit for a declaration of his title to the properties attached; but that suit failed. According to the plaintiff, the defendant obtained a stay order during the pendency of his declaratory suit, and in collusion with the custodian of the property, who had been appointed by the court, and the judgment-debtor, he dishonestly removed the sugar, sold the same and misappropriated the sale proceeds. This misappropriation was alleged to have taken place in May or June, 1926. The plaintiff filed a complaint in the Criminal Court on the 27th July, 1926, which, however, proved infructuous. He then filed his suit on the 29th July, 1929, the 27th and 28th July being holidays.

The claim was resisted on merits, as well as on the ground of limitation and absence of cause of action. The trial court, without going into the facts, dismissed the suit on the plea of limitation alone, holding that Art. 49 of the Limitation Act applied and the claim was more than three years after the misappropriation.

On appeal the lower Appellate Court has come to the conclusion that neither Art. 48 nor 49, nor even Art. 36 of the Limitation Act applies, but that the residuary Art. 120 applies and the claim was within time. It has accordingly sent the case back to the trial court for decision on the remaining issues.

It is well settled that the residuary Art. 120 cannot be applied where there is any other special article applicable to the facts of the case. If, therefore, the suit falls under any of the other articles, this omnibus article would be inapplicable.

As observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of L. P. E. Pugh v. Ashutosh Sen (1), Arts. 48 and 49 are intended to apply to suits for recovery of specific moveable property or for compensation for the same. Article 48 is more special, whereas Art. 49 is more general. Article 48 is confined to cases where the moveable property has been lost or acquired by theft or dishonest misappropriation or conversion, and for compensation for wrongfully taking or detaining the same. Article 49 applies to other specific moveable properties or for compensation for wrongfully taking or injuring or wrongfully detaining the same. If we had to look to nothing but the first column in Art. 48, the present case, being one of dishonest misappropriation or conversion, might be thought to fall under it. But in the last column it provides that time begins to run from the date when the person having the right to the possession of the property first learns in whose possession it is. The article is accordingly intended to apply to cases where the plaintiff having the right to the possession of the property learns of the acquisition by theft or dishonest misappropriation or conversion. In the present case the plaintiff was a mere attaching creditor and had no right to the possession of the property itself. His only remedy was to put it up for sale after the decree had been obtained and realise his decretal amount, although he might himself have purchased the property in lieu of it. It, therefore, seems to us that Art. 48 cannot apply to the facts of the present case. Article 49 is a more general article and applies to other cases of specific moveable property being wrongfully taken, injured or detained. The difference between Arts. 48 and 49 is that while the former refers to cases where the property has been lost, acquired by theft or dishonest misappropriation or conversion, the latter applies to other cases of wrongfully taking, injuring or detaining moveable property. No clear authority directly in point either way has been brought to our notice. But we think that having regard to its language Art. 49 also is intended to apply to cases where the plaintiff had a right to possession of the moveable property which was wrongfully taken from him, injured or wrongfully detained. The plaintiff's remedy is to sue for the recovery of the specific moveable property or in the alternative for its compensation for wrongfully taking, injuring or wrongfully detaining. In such a case the period begins to run from the time when the property was wrongfully taken, injured or the defendants' possession became unlawful. In the present case, the plaintiff was a mere attaching creditor. He had no right to possession of the goods. His right was confined to get the goods sold through the court and realise his decretal money out of the sale proceeds. His attachment took precedence over any private transfer made by the judgment-debtor pending the same. But this right did not entitle the plaintiff to take possession of the goods direct. Article 49 accordingly is not applicable.

Article 36 is a more general article. It is applicable to suits for compensation for any malfeasance, misfeasance, or nonfeasance independent of contract. It refers to action which may be on account of the commission of some act which is in itself unlawful, or being the improper performance of some lawful act, or the omission of some act which a person by law is bound to do. It is a general article for suits for compensation for all acts and omissions amounting to torts which are not provided for elsewhere. It, therefore, follows that as neither Art. 48 nor Art. 49 applies, Art. 36 must apply. Accordingly, the residuary Art. 120 cannot apply. But Art. 36 gives only two years' time to the plaintiff. The suit was brought more than three years after the day when the property was wrongfully taken. The claim is obviously barred by time.

Even if we assume in favour of the plaintiff that owing to a fraudulent act of the defendant he was prevented from knowing the fact of the misappropriation of the goods, and, therefore, the knowledge of his right to sue for compensation was withheld from him by the defendant, and that he can get the benefit of the provision of s. 18 of the Limitation Act, the claim is hopelessly beyond time. He admitted that he came to know of the misappropriation on the 27th of July, 1926, and the period of years would begin to run from that day. The suit was filed on the 29th of July, 1929, and was therefore beyond time.

We are accordingly of opinion that the plaintiff's claim would fail on the ground of limitation. We allow the appeal and setting aside the order of the court below restore the decree of the first court dismissing the suit, with costs in all courts.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 222 (2) —Criminal misappropriation—Proof of specific sums misappropriated, whether necessary—Nature of proof required for conviction—Scope of the section.

In a charge for criminal misappropriation it is not necessary for the prosecution to prove that the accused spent the items in any particular manner. The prosecution must stop when it is proved that the accused has received the money, has acknowledged the receipt and has failed to pay it to his master or show it in his master's accounts. King-Emperor v. Kadir Bakhsh (1), followed [p. 811, cols. 1 & 2.]

Under s. 222, cl. 2, Criminal Procedure Code, persons who showed a deficiency in the accounts with which they were entrusted could be convicted of criminal misappropriation even when it could not be shown that they had misappropriated any specific sum. K. K. Mukerjee v. Emperor (6), Samiruddin Sarkar v. Narain Chandra Ghose (7) and Emperor v. Bhatkhande (8), relied on. Buddhu v. Babu Lal (2), Queen-Empress v. Kellie (3), *Thomas v. Criminal Appeal against an order of the Additional Session Judge, Unao, dated the 17th of October, 1930.

Mr J. M. Basu, for the Appellant.

The Assistant Government Advocate (Mr. Ali Muhammad), for the Crown

Judgment—The appellant Shiam Sundar was the Munim of Lala Dwarka Nath, Taluqdar of Maurawan. He has been convicted on three counts of offences under s. 408 of the Indian Penal Code and he has been sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment on each charge, the sentences to run concurrently. The learned Sessions Judge has written a long and elaborate judgment in which he has given in full all the accounts which were kept by this man for the period of one year during which the offences are said to have been committed. There are three charges; two of specific acts of embezzlement and one of a general defalcation evidenced by the deficiency in his balance at the end of the year. This last charge is supported by the evidence of the account books kept by the accused himself and he has been unable to show either that he has entered the accounts correctly or that he has handed over to his master the court balance. On the contrary in many cases the kachchi rokar showed different totals from the pakki rokar. At times where his balance showed a deficit he has entered fictitious items as deposits made by himself in order to square the totals, and when he was finally called upon to pay in the balance in hand he only paid in a sum of Rs. 335 odd, whereas his accounts showed, according to the learned Sessions Judge, that he should have had in hand at that time over Rs. 1,771. I may remark that the Judge has cut down this sum. According to the evidence it was considerably more. In appeal the learned Counsel for the accused has attacked the conviction on the two specific items on the ground that there is no definite proof that the accused took this money. It is true that there is no proof as to how he dealt with the money but it is proved without doubt that he received both these items, one of Rs. 15 6 11 on the 26th of September, 1928, and the other of Rs. 175 on the 12th of June, 1929, from Ziladars of his master, that he gave receipts for them and that he himself signed arz irsals which showed that these items had been paid in. Yet there is no mention of either item in the accounts and he never handed in these sums to his master or complained that he had given receipts without receiving the money. It is consequently too late for him to make that defence now and I hold that it is proved that he received both these items, that he did not pay them to his master, that he did not enter them into his accounts and I must infer from that that he misappropriated both these items to his own use. Generally speaking, it is impossible for the prosecution to follow the money in the hands of an accused person and prove that he spent a certain specific item in any particular manner. The prosecution must stop when it is proved that the accused has received the money, has acknowledged the receipt and has failed to pay it to his master or show it in his master's accounts. See King Emperor v. Kadir Bakhsh (1).

The learned Counsel for the appellant has challenged the conviction on the third charge on the ground that a conviction on a general deficiency is not in accordance with s. 222 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Before the passing of the present Act a Bench of the Allahabad High Court ruled in the case of Buddhu v. Babu Lal (2), made the following observations:—

"Where an agent or servant has received over a period of time several sums on behalf of his employer, and has, during the same time, expended moneys on behalf of or made payments to his employer, but still a deficiency was left, for which the agent or servant would or could not account, it might be impossible to fix him with the embezzlement of any particular item received by him, although, taking the items proved on both sides of the account and his course of conduct, it might be obvious that he had embezzled a large sum of money, namely, the difference between the amounts received and those expended and accounted for."

Their Lordships then said that the question of liability in such a case had been decided by Mr. Justice Aikman in Queen-Empress v. Kellie (3) and they agreed with that decision and, therefore, held that a servant charged with an offence of this nature could be legally convicted. I have been asked to consider that the law as laid down by the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court is not good law in view of the provisions of s. 222 of the present Code of Criminal Procedure of the year 1898. The second clause of that section runs as follows:—

"When the accused is charged with criminal breach of trust or dishonest misappropriation of money, it shall be sufficient to specify the gross sum in respect of which the offence is alleged to have been committed."

Commenting on this section as far back as the year 1911 a Bench of the Madras High Court in the case of Thomas v. Emperor (4), observed that they were unable to accept the argument addressed to them that s. 222 was only intended to apply to cases where there is a general deficiency of account, and this ruling has led to many rulings by other High Courts to the effect that a number of specific charges may be included in one charge framed in accordance with the provisions of this section. There is, as far as I know only one ruling of any High Court which takes the point of view that a conviction on a general deficiency of accounts is improper. This is to be found in the case of Emperor v. Mohan Singh (5). But I observe that in that case the learned Judge only expressed a grave doubt as to whether the form of the charge in which it was sent to the Sessions Judge was one which the Judge ought to have entertained and he gave his own opinion that s. 222 was meant for a case where a man is charged with embezzling the gross sum by which he appears to have meant the total of items embezzled as distinct from the difference between the sums actually received and the sums actually credited. It is probable that the learned Judge accepted the view of law taken in England by certain authorities that at a trial for embezzlement it is not sufficient to prove a general deficiency in account. But in England there is a conflict of authority on this question, and in India the courts have to construe not the English Law but the Indian Codes. A Bench of the Calcutta High Court in the case of K. K. Mukerji v. King-Emperor (6) considered the object of the amendment made in the Code of Criminal Procedure by the introduction of sub s (2) of s. 222. The learned Judges pointed out that it was not to amend the Penal Code but merely to get rid of a technical difficulty in framing the charge. As the law then stood it was difficult to convict, where there was a running account and the prosecution was unable to put their hand on specific items out of which the particular sum was embezzled. There is, therefore, no question that the learned Judges were of opinion that s. 222, cl. (2) was primarily enacted so that persons who showed a deficiency in the accounts with which they were entrusted could be convicted of criminal misappropriation even when it could not be shown that they had misappropriated this or that specific sum. In an earlier case in Samiruddin Sarkar v. Narain Chandra Ghose (7), the same High Court held that a man who had realized by 23 rent receipts a sum of Rs. 103 and misappropriated out of this the sum of Rs. 67 could be properly convicted on a charge framed in accordance with s. 222. And the Bombay High Court in Emperor v. Bhatkhande (8) has taken the same view as the Calcutta High Court and distinguished the Allahabad ruling to which I have referred—Emperor v. Mohan Singh (5).

In the present case the accused is shown to have kept false accounts. These accounts were checked by one Deckinandan and the learned Sessions Judge has considered this man to be an expert and has accepted for the most part his evidence. The accused, who is himself a munim and should at least understand his own accounts, has made no serious attempt to explain what he has done with the money which he is shown to have received and which he entered wrongly in his accounts. He made an elaborate written statement and when he was examined in court his usual reply to any question was that it was contained in his written statement even when it is not. For the rest he contended himself with making foolish allegations as to his master. It is certainly difficult to say with certainty the amount which he embezzled but the learned Counsel has been unable to show any item on which the learned Sessions Judge can be held to have gone wrong. He finds that the total deficiency apart from the two specific items was Rs. 1,771-7-1 and this sum was embezzled in the course of a single year. In my opinion the conviction was proper in law and in accordance with the evidence. As to the sentence I do not consider that it is excessive and I accordingly dismiss this appeal and uphold the conviction and sentence on all counts. The accused must surrender to his bail.

OPPOSITE PARTIES.

Mussalman Wakf Act (XLII of 1923), ss. 3, 5, 10—Failure to submit statement of accounts—Conviction—Denial of wakf—Effect of—Jurisdiction of District Judge to impose penalty.

Mussalman Wakf Act of 1923 is applicable to all instruments other than those to which the Mussalman Wakf Validating Act of 1913 applies. [p. 814, col. 1.]

Under the Act of 1923 all that is needed to bring home the offence under s. 10 read with s. 3 is to establish by evidence that the offender is a mutawalli in respect of property which is wakf within the meaning of Act XLII of 1923, though the mutawalli is bound to file a statement only if he has already furnished particulars under s. 3. If the mutawalli has complied with the provisions of s. 3 no question as to whether he denies the wakf or admits it can arise because by his conduct in furnishing particulars of the wakf property he may be deemed to have admitted the wakf and he can be convicted for failure to file statement under s. 5 of the Mussalman Wakf Validating Act of 1923. [p. 814, cols. 1 & 2.]

The District Judge is the proper authority to impose the penalty provided for by s. 10. It is not necessary to proceed against the mutawalli in a regular Criminal Court. [p. 815, col. 1 & 2.]

Civil Revision against an order of the District Judge, Moradabad, dated the 26th August, 1930.

Mr. A. M. Khawaja, for the Applicant.

Mr. A. Aziz, for the Opposite Parties.

Pullan, J.—This is an application in revision of an order of the District Judge of Moradabad imposing a fine of Rs. 50 upon the applicant, Nasrullah, under s. 10 of the Mussalman Wakf Validating Act (XLII of 1923). The proceedings are the direct outcome of former proceedings which have been the subject of a reported ruling of this court Nasrullah Khan v. Wajid Ali (1). My brother Niamatullah was a member of the Bench which decided that case. There the question was whether under s. 5 of Act XLII of 1923 the District Judge could, on the intervention of other persons, call upon a "mutawalli" to furnish accounts of a 'wakf' and the view taken by the Bench was that the Act does not authorize the District Judge to pass an order that the 'mutawalli' should file a statement of account, as contemplated by s. 5, and that the only procedure provided was to punish him under s. 10 of the same Act for not doing so. Accordingly, the same persons approached the District Judge and requested him to take action under s. 10. The Judge felt that he had to decide the question which was left undecided by this court, namely, whether the wakf was a wakf covered by Act XLII of 1923, before passing an order of fine. In my opinion, he was bound to decide this question. His jurisdiction depended on the fact that the wakf was one under Act XLII of 1923, and until he decided that question, he could impose no fine under the Act. Nasrullah is a person who, in compliance with s. 3 of the Act, made a statement as to the property of the wakf and by so doing was held in the judgment of this court to which I have already referred, to have fulfilled the requirements of s. 3 of the Act. I am of opinion that he brought himself under the other provisions of the Act also and established his own liability to furnish accounts and made himself open to punishment for not doing so. It is true that from time to time Nasrullah has denied that the property which he manages was a wakf within the meaning of the Act, but I cannot consider that this denial is of any value in view of his own action in complying with the requirements of the Act in the first instance. Moreover, once the learned District Judge went into the facts of the case as in my opinion, he was entitled to do he found that in the year 1842 the Commissioner passed an order showing the nature of this wakf, and it is clear from that order that this was a wakf such as is contemplated by Act XLII of 1923 and is not one of those wakfs which are excluded from the Act by s. 2 (e). Thus, in my opinion, the District Judge was in a position to deal with Nasrullah under the Act if he found that Nasrullah had not complied with the provisions of the Act in the matter of filing accounts. In such cases the District Judge appears to act suo motu; but in actual practice he can never take action, unless somebody calls his attention to the fact that a mutawalli has failed to perform his duties. The part played by the opposite party in this case is merely the part of calling to the notice on the District Judge an impropriety of which he is able to take cognizance. The Judge has imposed a fine of Rs. 50. His jurisdiction is not impeached in the grounds for revision, and although the wording of s. 10 is far from clear, I am of opinion that the District Judge is, under that section, the only person who can take proceedings and who can, therefore, impose the fine. The fine does not appear to be excessive, and I do not consider that this court has any cause to interfere with the decision. I would, therefore, dismiss this application, but I do not consider this is a case in which costs should be allowed.

Niamatullah, J.—The applicant has been held guilty of what should be considered to be an offence under s. 10 of Act XLII of 1923, and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 50. Two main questions arise in revision: first, whether the applicant incurred the penalty provided for by s. 10 of the aforesaid Act, and secondly, whether the District Judge who convicted and fined him had jurisdiction to do so.

As regards the 1st question, s. 10 makes an omission to do what is required of a mutawalli by s. 3 or s. 5 of the Act to be punishable. As both these sections make use of the words mutawalli and wakf, we must consider, at the threshold of the case, whether the applicant is a mutawalli and the property in question in the present case is 'wakf'. 'Wakf' has been so defined in Act XLII of 1923, Section 2 (e), as to include all endowments other than those to which the Musalman Wakf Validating Act (VI of 1913) applies. In other words, all wakfs other than 'wakfsalal aulad' are within the purview of Act XLII of 1923. The property in dispute in this case has been in possession of the applicant and his predecessors for a considerable length of time, and its character is clearly determined by an order of the Commissioner passed in 1843. The learned District Judge has referred to the terms of that order which satisfied him that the property in question was 'wakf' for the support and upkeep of a mosque and incidental purposes, including the maintenance of a 'muazzin' who is to be selected from among the descendants of the original mutawalli the applicant's ancestor. Nothing has been said on behalf of the applicant which can induce me to differ from the view taken by the learned District Judge as regards the character of the property in possession of the applicant. I am, therefore, in entire agreement with my learned colleague that the property in question is 'wakf' and not dedicated for the personal benefit of the descendants or family of the 'wakf'. The applicant himself professed to act as mutawalli, and thereby admitted his position as such, in furnishing particulars of the property in his possession, as required by s. 3 of Act XLII of 1923. It follows from what has been said already that the property in question is 'wakf' within the meaning of that Act and the applicant is the mutawalli thereof.

It is necessary to refer to two sections of Act XLII of 1923 before examining the terms of s. 10. Section 3 requires every mutawalli to furnish particulars of the 'wakf' property in his possession. Section 5 requires him, if he has furnished particulars under s. 3, to file a statement of account within three months after the 31st day of March following the passing of Act XLII, of 1923 and thereafter within 3 months after the 31st March of each year. Section 10 makes failure to furnish particulars as required by s. 3 or to file statements of accounts as required by s. 5 punishable with fine, which may extend to Rs. 500. It has been argued before us that Act XL I of 1923 is applicable only to cases in which a 'mutawalli' accepts his position as such and furnishes particulars required by s. 3. This contention is correct so far as the 'mutawalli's' omission to file a statement of accounts under s. 5 is concerned, because he has to file such statement only if he has already furnished particulars under s. 3. It is, however, incorrect to say that a person is not liable to be punished under s. 10 at all, unless he admits certain property in his possession to be 'wakf' and himself to be the 'mutawalli' thereof. Section 10 makes omission to furnish particulars as required by s. 3 also punishable. All that is needed to bring home an offence under s. 10 read with s. 3 to a defaulting 'mutawalli' is to establish by evidence that he is a 'mutawalli' in respect of property which is 'wakf' within the meaning of Act XLII of 1923. Whether the character of the property as 'wakf' and his own position as 'mutawalli' are admitted or are established by evidence, if denied, s. 10 is equally applicable if a 'mutawalli' has failed to comply with s. 3. If a 'mutawalli' has complied with the provisions of s. 3, no question as to whether he denies the 'wakf' or admits it can arise, because by his conduct in furnishing particulars of the 'wakf' property he must be deemed to have admitted the 'wakf' and his own position as 'mutawalli'.

The applicant in this case furnished particulars of the property in question under s. 3. He cannot, therefore, be convicted of an offence under s. 10 read with s. 3. Nor has the learned District Judge convicted him of such offence. But, having furnished particulars required by s. 3, he was also under an obligation to file a statement of account in terms of s. 5. He omitted to do so. Section 10 makes such omission to be as much punishable as the non compliance with the provisions of s. 3, the penalty in either case being the same. In these circumstances, I do not think there is anything wanting in the case before us to complete an offence under s. 10 of Act XLII of 1923, and so far as the applicant's liability to pay the penalty provided for by s. 10 is concerned, there can be no doubt.

The next question, which is not free from difficulty, relates to the court empowered to enforce the penal provision contained in s. 10. I was a member of the Bench which decided Nasarullah Khan v. Wajid Ali (1) which is, in fact, an earlier stage of the case before us. The only question which called for decision in that case was whether

s. 5 of Act XLII of 1923, apart from laying an obligation on a 'mutawalli' to furnish a statement of account, also contemplated regular proceedings being taken before the District Judge for the determination of the question whether a certain property is 'wakf' or whether a certain person is a 'mutawalli' in respect thereof. It was held that s. 5 did not empower the District Judge to decide these questions in a proceeding taken by interested parties under s. 5. The court went on to observe that the determination of such questions may be necessary if the 'mutawalli' is prosecuted for an offence under s. 10, and the alleged 'mutawalli' denies facts which establish his offence and which have to be enquired into. As regards the forum, it was assumed rather than decided that the District Judge can enforce the penal provision contained in s. 10. Any remark, therefore, as to whether the District Judge could impose the fine provided for by s. 10 is in the nature of an obiter dictum. The question has directly arisen in the present case and must be decided, though, I may note, that it was not argued before us that any court, other than that of the District Judge, could impose a fine under s. 10. The applicant's contention was that no court had jurisdiction to do so in the circumstances of the case. We cannot, however, refuse to take notice of the narrower question, namely, whether the District Judge as such can take cognizance of a case under s. 10. On the one hand, it can be reasonably contended that s. 10 contains merely a penal provision which declares a certain omission to be an offence punishable with fine, that the manner in which and the court by which the penalty is to be enforced are outside the purview of Act XLII of 1923, and that the 'mutawalli' should be punished by a regular Criminal Court in accordance with the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code. There are many enactments, besides the Indian Penal Code, which declare certain acts and omissions to be offences, though the trial for those offences is regulated not by those Acts but by the general Criminal Law. On the other hand, the whole scheme of Act XLII of 1923 suggests that the District Judge is the proper authority to impose the penalty provided for by s. 10 in respect of certain duties enjoined by that Act. Section 11 requires the Local Government to make rules "to carry into effect the purposes of this Act". This seems to include rules prescribing the forum and the procedure for enforcement of the penalty laid down in

s. 10. No rules have, however, been framed by the Local Government in this behalf. In this state of things, I am inclined to the view, though not without hesitation, that the District Judge is the proper authority to enforce the provision contained in s. 10 of Act XLII of 1923. For these reasons, I concur with my learned brother in dismissing this revision.

By the Court.—We dismiss this application. The parties shall bear their own costs.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 44 (2), 79—Adjudication of firm—Discharge of partners—Subsequent arrest of partner for private debts, legality of—Adjudication, effect of—Failure of court to frame rules—Procedure.

It is not only incumbent on the creditors of a firm which has been adjudicated as insolvent but also on the creditors of each individual partner to prove their claims in the insolvency proceedings, and a partner whose property has vested in the Official Receiver for the benefit of his creditors should not be allowed to be harassed again by one of such creditors merely and solely because the order of adjudication was not passed in an application directed against him but against a firm in which he was a partner or because, for the sake of convenience the court passed an order against the firm and did not pass a specific order against each individual partner in such firm. Sadler v. Whiteman (1) and In re The Firm of Hiralal Shinnarain (2), referred to. [p. 816, col. 2.]

The failure of the Court to frame rules as required by s. 79, Provincial Insolvency Act, cannot override the provision of the law which exempts an insolvent from liability for his debts prior to the date of his insolvency on his obtaining a discharge. In the absence of such rules the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code apply to insolvency proceedings in view of s. 5 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. [ibid]

First Appeal against an order of the Additional Judicial Commissioner, Sind.

Mr. L. P. Ferro, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kimatrai Bhojraj, for the Respondents.

Judgment—This appeal arises out of execution proceedings. The appellant Heerji Jivraj worked at one time as a partner in the firm of Rawji Hirji. That firm was adjudicated insolvent in Insolvency No. 3 of 1921. On 2nd June, 1925, the learned Judicial Commissioner

Mr. Kennedy passed an order of discharge which read as follows:—

"I discharge the firm of Rawji Hirji (Rawji Jethabhai and Hirji Jivraj, insolvents.)"

The firm of Jivraj Lakhamai had obtained a decree in Suit No. 19 of 1915 against the firm of "Hirji Jivraj said to consist of more than one partner and carrying on business in Karachi by their Managing partner Hirji Jivraj." It appears that this firm did not prove their claim against Hirji Jivraj in the Insolvency proceedings. But by an award made between the firm of Jivraj Lakhamai and Messrs. Valabhram Mulji a charge was created in favour of the latter on the decretal amount due to the firm of Jivraj Lakhamai in the suit of 1915 from the firm of Hirji Jivraj. On the strength of that award Messrs. Valabhram Mulji applied for execution of the decree in favour of Jivraj Lakhamai against Hirji Jivraj by arrest of Hirji Jivraj. He objected to his arrest on two grounds: First that the award creating a mortgage in favour of Messrs. Valabhram Mulji did not amount to an assignment of the decree so as to enable them to apply for execution of the decree and secondly that as he was a discharged insolvent he could not be arrested in respect of a debt due by him prior to his insolvency. The learned Additional Judicial Commissioner disallowed both these objections and ordered a warrant of arrest to issue. It is against that decision that the appellant has come to us in appeal.

In dealing with the 2nd objection the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner has said:—

"It is further contended that the judgment-debtor has filed his insolvency application and has been discharged. The firm of Rowji Hirji in which the judgment-debtor was a partner was declared insolvent and later the partners were discharged. The judgment-debtor firm in the present proceedings is however a different firm; the debts of the present firm would not have been proveable in the insolvency proceedings of the other firm in which the judgment-debtor was a partner."

With all respect, we are afraid, we cannot accept this view to be correct.

A partnership has in law no corporate personal existence distinct from that of its individual partners; and the firm name is a mere expression, not a legal entity, per Farwell L. J. in Sadler v. Whiteman (1). An order passed in the insolvency proceedings against a firm is an order passed against each individual partner in that firm, In re The firm of Hiralal Shivnarain (2). When an order of adjudication is passed either under the Provincial or the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act against a firm, not only does the property of the firm vest in the Official Receiver or Assignee, as the case may be, but also the property of each individual partner vests in him. Both these Acts provide for the procedure which the Official Receiver or Assignee, as the case may be, is required to follow for dealing with such property. He is required to apply the partnership property in discharge of the partnership debts and likewise to apply the private property of each individual partner in discharge of his private debts in the first instance, and it is only when there is a surplus of either kind of property that he has power to apply it in payments of the other debts. It is not only incumbent on the creditors of a firm which has been adjudicated as insolvent but also on the creditors of each individual partner to prove their claims in the insolvency proceedings, and it would be unfair to an insolvent whose property has vested in the Official Receiver for the benefit of his creditors to be harassed again by one of such creditors merely and solely because the order of adjudication was not passed in an application directed against him but against a firm in which he was a partner or because for the sake of convenience the court passed an order against the firm and did not pass a specific order against each individual partner in such firm.

Mr. Kimatrai has argued that in 1921 when an order of adjudication was passed against the firm of Rawji Hirji this court had not framed rules as required by s. 79 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, that in the absence of those rules the private creditors of each individual partner in an insolvent firm were not served with notices of insolvency and that there was no procedure under which such creditors could prove their claims. But the obvious answer to that argument is that the failure of the court to frame rules cannot override the provision of the law which exempts an insolvent from liability of his debts prior to the date of his insolvency on his obtaining a discharge. In the absence of such rules the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code apply to insolvency proceedings in view of s. 5 of the Act.

For these reasons we think that the appellant was exempt from arrest in execution of this decree.

Under the circumstances it is not necessary for us to go into the other question, namely whether the respondent is an assignee of the decree or not.

We, accordingly, allow this appeal but make no order as to costs.

Allahabad High Court General Rules, Chap. I, r. 1—Costs—Pleader's fees—Fees not actually paid—Mere execution of promissory note—Fees, whether taxable—Decree—Amendment—Duty of Court.

Rule 1 of Chap. I of the General Rules of the Allahabad High Court relating to Pleader's fees contemplates the actual payment and not a mere promise to pay even though such promise is evidenced by a promissory note, bond or other instrument, and, therefore, if payment of fees is not actually made to the Pleader it could not be taxed as part of the costs incurred by the party who is alleged to have made payment. The legal aspect of the matter is not altered by the fact that the Judge had permitted payment by means of a promissory note. [p. 818, cols. 1 & 2.]

The duty of preparing the decree in accordance with the judgment primarily rests with the court and not with the interested party. [p. 818, col. 2; p. 819, col. 1.]

When the judgment awards costs to a party it implies the costs deemed to be such according to the rules. [ibid.]

Civil Revision against a decision of the District Judge, Budaun, dated the 5th November, 1930.

Mr. A. Sanyal, for the Applicant.

Mr. P. M. L. Verma, for the Opposite Parties.

Judgment.—This is an application for revision directed against an order passed by the learned District Judge of Budaun in proceedings taken by the present applicant for amendment of a decree passed by him, which decree was subsequently appealed from and affirmed by this court.

The applicant was the plaintiff in the suit originally instituted in the court of the Subordinate Judge of Budaun. It was decreed ex parte. An application for an order to set aside the ex parte decree was dismissed by that court; but on appeal to this court it was successful. The suit was however, remanded not to the court of the Subordinate Judge, but to that of the District Judge for trial on the merits. It was eventually dismissed by the District Judge with costs. Included in the memo. of costs appended to the decree prepared by the District Judge were two sums taxed as costs properly incurred by the plaintiff: one was a sum of Rs. 735, paid to Babu Sheo Narain Jafa, senior Vakil, and the other a sum of Rs. 299 paid to Babu Prem Mohan Lal, junior Vakil. It is conceded that these sums were not paid to the aforesaid Vakils in cash and that a promissory note was executed by Musammat Pania, wife and 'mukhtar i am' of one of the defendants, in favour of both the Vakils. The certificates filed by the Vakils themselves showed that cash had not been paid, but that a promissory note had been executed in their favour in lieu of the unpaid part of their fees.

The defendants, on whose behalf the above named Vakils appeared, were in Jail at the time the certificates were filed. The lower Court has mentioned in its judgment that the promissory note was executed with the permission of the then District Judge. The learned Counsel for the applicant has controverted this fact and drawn our attention to an application, dated 8th March, 1927, presented by B. Sheo Narain Jafa, in which he represented to the District Judge that his clients were in Jail, that those who looked after the case on their behalf had paid only Rs. 140 in respect of the fees due to the Vakils who acted for them and that, if payment was not made, they would not file certificates and the defendants would, on the one hand, not be entitled to have the legal practitioners' fees taxed, and would, on the other hand, be liable to pay on a suit being brought by the legal practitioners for recovery of their fees. Babu Sheo Narain Jafa requested the District Judge by this application to send for the defendants, who, as already stated, were in Jail, so that they might execute promissory notes in favour of the Vakils, who would, in that case, file certificates and the fees thus paid would be taxed as costs recoverable from the opposite party. The only order which the learned District Judge noted on this application was "permitted." Reading this order in the context in which it occurs, we think that what the learned District Judge meant was that the defendants be allowed to come to the court to settle matters with their Vakils. We are not aware whether this was done; but it is certain that no promissory note was executed by the defendants themselves and it was Musammat Pania who did so. A promissory note was filed with the certificates in which the Vakils acknowledged receipt of a certain amount as fees by obtaining execution of the promissory note. The promissory note bears an order of the District Judge that the same be retained with the record. In these circumstances, it is not correct to say that the promissory note executed in favour of the two Vakils, which constituted the payment referred to in their certificates was executed with the permission of the District Judge, though he was aware of the circumstances and the manner in which payment had been made; but even assuming that the District Judge expressly permitted this mode of payment, the legal aspect of the matter is not different. Rule 1, Chap. XXI, of the General Rules applicable to the Subordinate Courts distinctly provides that "in drawing up a decree or order no fee to any legal practitioner not appearing for the Crown or Government or the Court of Wards as a party shall be allowed on taxation between party and party or shall be included in any decree or order.....unless the munsarim or, on application to the Judge, the Judge is satisfied that the fees was paid to such legal practitioner at or before the hearing of the suit. . . . and unless at or before such time shall have been delivered to the munsarim a certificate signed by the legal practitioner certifying the amount of the fee or fees actually paid to him for his own actual use and benefit by or on behalf of his client." There can be no doubt that the rule quoted above contemplates actual payment, and not a mere promise to pay, even though such promise is evidenced by a promissory note, bond or any other instrument. The learned District Judge was apparently under the impression that there is no law which made payment to a legal practitioner in the manner adopted in this case as no payment for the purposes of taxation of costs. The rule already referred to by us has the force of law, and is clearly against the view accepted by the learned Judge.

We think that Babu Sheo Narain Jafa did not correctly represent matters to the learned District Judge in stating that, if payments were made to the legal practitioners by promissory notes being executed in their favour, the same would be taxed as costs in the suit. Either he did not acquaint himself with the rules on the subject, or knew the rule quoted above and yet assured the District Judge that such costs could be taxed. In either case, his action was unjustified. He was apparently anxious to secure the payment of fees to himself and his junior colleague by promissory notes being executed in their favour. The District Judge was not opposed to that mode of payment, as he had been given to understand that payments made in that manner would be taxed as costs incurred in the suit. Be that as it may, we entertain no doubt that the payment of fees to legal practitioner must be made in the manner laid down by r. 1, Chap. XXI, already referred to, and that, if payment is not actually made but is only promised, it cannot be taxed as part of the costs incurred by the party alleged to have made the payment. This being so, the sums of Rs. 735, taxed as fee paid to Babu Sheo Narain Jafa and Rs. 299 taxed as fee paid to Babu Prem Mohan Lal, should not have been taxed.

The learned Advocate for the opposite party has contended that the lower Court had no jurisdiction to order an amendment of its own decree, which became merged in the decree of this court passed on appeal and that, therefore, the application for amendment of decree was incompetent. According to his contention, the application for amendment of decree must be made to the Court of Appeal, that is, to the High Court in this case. It is not necessary for us to decide the legal question involved in this contention, because assuming the application for amendment of the decree should have been made to this court in the first instance, we can treat and are inclined to treat the application for revision as such application and dispose of the matter on the merits to prevent multiplicity of proceedings. We have already expressed our opinion on the merits, and whether we entertain the application as one for revision or as an original application made to this court, our view is the same. There is no doubt that the District Judge who took a contrary view acted in contravention of r. 1, Chap. XXI and to that extent he exercised his jurisdiction illegally. If, therefore, we entertain the application as revision, the ground for interference under s. 115, Civil Procedure Code clearly exists.

The learned Counsel for the opposite party also contended that the applicant was guilty of laches and his belated application for amendment of decree should not have been entertained by the District Judge and should not be entertained by this court. We do not think there is any force in this argument. It is the duty of a court to prepare its decree in accordance with its judgment, and if there is any variance between the two it must correct the decree so as to make it in conformity with the judgment. The duty primarily rests with the court, and not with any interested party, to apply to that court for amendment of the decree. When a judgment awards costs to a party, it implies costs deemed to be such according to rules. If a decree includes costs not legally taxable, it cannot be said to be in accordance with the judgment. Moreover, there are no facts on which the plea of laches or undue delay can be founded.

In view of the circumstances already stated, we allow this application in part and direct that the decree of the court of the District Judge, Budaun, in suit No. 70 of 1925, be so amended as to exclude the sums of Rs. 735 and Rs. 299, shown as fees paid to the defendants' Pleaders, namely, Babu Sheo Narain Jafa and Babu Prem Mohan Lal, from the memorandum of costs incurred by the defendants.

Another prayer, which the applicant made to this court in revision, and to the learned District Judge in the first instance, was that a sum of Rs. 450, paid to the legal practitioners in miscellaneous proceedings taken for an order to set aside the ex parte decree, should not be taxed in its entirety. Rs. 225 was paid to the legal practitioners of each of two sets of defendants, whose defence proceeded on a common ground. The decree prepared by the trial court allows the entire sum of Rs. 450 as part of the costs incurred by the defendants against whom the plaintiff-applicant's suit was dismissed. There is no mistake in the decree in this respect. The suit was dismissed with costs, which means costs incurred by all the defendants against whom the plaintiff's suit was dismissed. We are satisfied that the order passed by the learned District Judge in this connection is not open to challenge. The application is dismissed in that respect.

In the circumstances of this case, parties shall bear their own costs of the proceedings taken before this court and those in the court of the District Judge by an application for amendment.

Mr Kimatrai Bhojraj, for the Plaintiff

Mr. C. M. Lobo, Government Pleader, for the Defendants.

Judgment.—This is a suit by the plaintiff for recovery of a refund of income-tax paid, which refund has been refused by the Income tax authorities.

The facts are as follows:— There was a firm of Messrs. Kadirbhoy Karimji doing business as timber merchants at Karachi; in December, 1926, the senior partner of the firm, Kadirbhoy, died, and the partnership was dissolved. The firm was assessed for their own financial year from October to October; thus for the income-tax year April 1927-1928, the firm's accounting period was October, 1925, to October, 1926. Kadirbhoy bequeathed to his widow, the plaintiff, his share of the profits of the business. The firm was treated as a registered firm and the firm's profits were taxed for the income-tax year 1927-1928 at the maximum rate of 18 pies. The partners under s. 48 of the Act applied for a refund of the tax, the rate at which their individual incomes were liable being less than the maximum rate. Plaintiff also applied as a partner for a refund for the tax payable on the profits which she received under her deceased husband's will. This application was refused on the ground that she was not a partner in the firm and was not entitled to a refund under s. 48 of the Act.

Two issues have been tried as preliminary issues. The first is, (Issue No. 7 of the issues framed).

"Is the suit as framed competent?"

And the second is, (2nd part of issue No. 3 of issues framed).

"Has the plaintiff any claim to refund?"

On the first of these issues, I hold in the affirmative and on the second, in the negative.

On the first preliminary issue, the defendants rely on s. 67 of the Income-Tax Act which bars any suit to modify or set aside any assessment made under the Act. Defendant contends that the Act is complete in itself, that the Act gives all the necessary remedies and s. 67 bars access to the Civil Courts.

Plaintiff, on the other hand, contends that ss. 30, 32 and 33 are limited in their scope; they apply to appeals against assessments made; they do not apply to the grant of refunds or to refusals to grant refunds. There is no provision made in the Act for appeals against a refusal to give a refund under s. 48 and the suit does not raise any question of assessment so as to be barred by s. 67.

The Government Pleader on behalf of the defendant replies that under rr. 36 and 37 the procedure in the case of refunds is practically the same as the procedure for assessment, and the question of refund and assessment is dealt with in one proceeding and under one form, and that assessment is determined after deciding whether a refund is or is not due.

I cannot hold, however, that because the procedure for grant of refund is ordinarily made part of the assessment procedure, that, therefore, it becomes a question of assessment. The provisions for assessment and the provisions for granting refund are in the Act entirely separate. A person who is not an assessee may be entitled to a refund. Section 67 refers to assessment. There does not appear to be any provision for appeal against an order refusing a refund. I hold that s. 67 which refers only to assessment does not bar the suit.

The second preliminary issue is whether plaintiff is legally entitled to any refund: Under s. 3 the profits of a firm are liable to income-tax. Under s. 26 as it stood in March, 1928, the assessment was to be made on the firm as constituted at the time the assessment was made; the assessee were the members of the firm as constituted at the time the assessment was made. Thus plaintiff's husband was not liable for the assessment or any part of it payable by the firm for the year 1927-1928, the assessment having been made in March, 1928, and plaintiff's husband having died in December, 1926.

Further, the estate of a dead person cannot be assessed to income-tax, Mitchell v. McNeil & Co. (1). The Income-tax authorities were not represented in that case, but the Government Pleader has accepted the proposition laid down therein. Section 48 (2) applies in the case of a member of a firm when the rate of income-tax applicable to his private income is less than the rate at which his firm is assessed. It applies then to an assessee of the year for which the assessment is made or a person who would have been an assessee if his own income apart from that of the firm reached the minimum; that is, it cannot apply to a person who died before the assessment on his own income is made. There was no rate of income-tax applicable to plaintiff's husband for the year 1927-28 as he or his estate was not liable to income-tax for that year.

Plaintiff's husband or his estate was at no time entitled to a refund (a) because he was not a person who paid the assessment on the firm for 1927-1928 nor was he liable to pay that assessment or any part of it (b) as he could not himself have been an assessee in the assessment year 1927-28. Plaintiff then cannot claim as heir to, or constructive owner of, any refund.

The only provision of law which plaintiff has put forward is s. 48 of the Income Tax Act, and it is clear that plaintiff was not a partner in the firm so as to be entitled to the benefit of the provisions of that section. She was merely entitled under the will of her deceased husband to certain profits which had accrued to the deceased.

Mr. Kimatrai has argued that there has been a change in the constitution of the firm, and that defendant has detained one-seventh of the refund due to the firm which belonged to the deceased partner and the plaintiff is entitled to that refund. There is, however, no question of detention of part of the refund, the refund is payable to each individual partner if his total income is assessable at a rate less than the maximum.

There is no question of a lump refund to be divided amongst the partners.

Plaintiff's suit is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Easements Act (V of 1882), ss. 60-B, 64—Building of wall—Failure to protest—Implied license—Erection of work of permanent character—Power to revoke—Right to injunction.

Where the defendant to whom a wall belonged knew that the plaintiff, an adjacent house owner, was constructing a wall above the defendant's wall and did not make any protest until it was built :

Held, that there was an implied grant of license by the defendant to the plaintiff that could not be revoked as the plaintiff had executed a work of a permanent character and incurred expenses in the execution and the defendant was not entitled to demolish the wall.

Section 64 of the Easements Act does not apply to case where the work is of a permanent character.

Second Appeal from a decision of the Second Subordinate Judge, Saharanpur, dated the 31st May, 1929.

Mr. Akhtar Husain Khan, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. A. Aziz, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal by the plaintiff against a decree of the lower Appellate Court which reduced the damages of the court of first instance from Rs. 50 to Rs. 25 for demolition of a wall, and which refused the remedy of injunction to the plaintiff. The defendants have filed a cross-objection claiming that on the findings of the lower Appellate Court the plaintiff is not entitled to any damages. The findings of the lower Appellate Court were that "the wall which was in dispute was the wall of the upper story of the house. The wall of the lower story on which the upper wall rested belongs admittedly to the defendants. The upper wall however appears to have been made by the plaintiff. Having regard however to the fact that the defendants must have had knowledge of the construction of the wall and to the absence of any protest on their part it may, I think, be inferred that the wall was built either with the implied consent or without any protest on the part of the defendants. Learned Counsel for the plaintiff contended that this would amount to an implied grant of licence by conduct of the grantor within the meaning of s. 54 of the Easements Act. Learned Counsel for defendants said that he could produce rulings to the contrary, but he could not find any such rulings. I consider that on the finding of the lower Appellate Court there was an implied grant of licence by the defendants to the plaintiff to construct the wall of this upper story on the wall of the lower story which belonged to the defendants. The two houses are side by side and the lower wall is apparently between the two houses separating them.

The next point is contained in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court which is as follows:

"The wall at best had been erected with the leave and the premission of the defendants. It is not shown that the licence cannot be revoked by the defendants".

Now under s. 60 (b) of the Easements Act a licence may be revoked unless the licensee acting upon the licence has executed a work of a permanent character and incurred expenses in the execution. The lower Appellate Court has found "The only loss that has been suffered by the plaintiff is the loss of construction of the wall. I am of opinion that a sum of Rs. 25 would be adequate as damages in this case".

This is a finding, therefore, that the plaintiff has incurred Rs. 25 in expense for the execution of this work. Learned Counsel argued that it was not proved to be a work of a permanent character. In the plaint it was alleged that the plaintiff had erected this wall and that the defendant had pulled it down. Those facts were admitted in the written statement and it was not alleged in the written statement that the wall was of a temporary and not of a permanent character. I consider prima facie that a wall which costs Rs. 25 to construct would be a wall of a permanent character and the finding of the lower Appellate Court appears to me to indicate that the wall was of a permanent character. Learned Counsel for respondent-defendants was given an opportunity to refer to the evidence of their witnesses on the record and he stated that he could not find any evidence that the wall was of a temporary character. Under these circumstances I consider that the finding of the lower Appellate Court is that the wall was of a permanent character and that expense had been incurred in its execution. Therefore under s. 60 (b) the defendants cannot revoke their licence.

Some further argument was made by learned Counsel, after the arguments were closed, with reference to s. 64 of the Easements Act and learned Counsel contended that under that section there should be no injunction issued to the plaintiff and that he would only be entitled to the Rs. 25 compensation granted by the lower Appellate Court. I do not think that that section applies to the present case, which is a case where the licence cannot be revoked because a work of a permanent character has been made, and where s. 60 (b) applies. I consider that s. 64 applies to a case where there is not a work of a permanent character and that in the present case s. 64 does not apply.

For these reasons I dismiss the cross-objection with costs and I allow the appeal with costs as the appellant succeeds in the major portion of his claim, that is that he should get an injunction. I restore the decree of the court of first instance with this difference that the appellant, although he will have an injunction, will only have Rs. 25 damages instead of Rs. 50 decreed by the court of first instance. The appellant will also receive his costs in the lower Appellate Court. In this court costs will embrace costs on the higher scale.

Where the period of limitation for a suit to recover a debt expires on a holiday and the judgment-debtor is adjudicated an insolvent on the next re-opening day, the debt can be proved in the insolvency. Appeal from a judgment of Mr.

Justice Waller, dated the 28th January, 1931, and passed in the exercise of the Insolvency Jurisdiction of the High Court in Application No. 73 of 1931, in Petition No. 441 of 1928, In the matter of A. S. D. Batcha Sahib, an insolvent.

Mr. A. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. Krishnaswami Aiyangar, for the Respondent.

Beasley, C. J.—This is an appeal from a judgment of Waller, J., sitting in insolvency. The Official Assignee allowed the claim of the appellant here which was in respect of a debt alleged to be due to her on a promissory note by the insolvent. A creditor preferred an appeal from the order of the Official Assignee to Waller, J., and he allowed the appeal.

The facts can be briefly stated. The insolvent owed the appellant money on a promissory note. The last payment was a payment of interest on the 20th of October, 1925. No further payment was made by the insolvent and the debt would have become and did become barred by limitation on the 20th October, 1928. Up to that time the appellant had taken no steps to enforce her claim against the insolvent on the promissory note. The 20th of October, which was a Saturday, was a public holiday and the High Court was closed. The next day, the 21st, was a Sunday and the court was closed that day also. On the 22nd October the appellant could have filed a suit against the insolvent upon the promissory note and enforced her claim because by reason of the provisions of s. 4 of the Limitation Act, the insolvent could not successfully set up as bar to the suit the Limitation Act. Section 4 of the Limitation Act is as follows:—

"Where the period of limitation prescribed for any suit, appeal or application expires on a day when the court is closed, the suit, appeal or application may be instituted, preferred or made on the day that the court re-opens."

However, on the morning of the 22nd October, 1928, the insolvent was adjudicated an insolvent and it is admitted that no steps were taken thereafter with regard to this claim by the appellant until she preferred her claim in the insolvency. Waller, J., held that, as the claim on the promissory note was barred on the 20th October and as the appellant had not filed a suit on the 22nd October, the first available day after that, her claim was one which could not be proved in the insolvency and accordingly allowed the appeal.

What we have got to consider here is, what effect an adjudication in insolvency has upon s. 4 of the Limitation Act. It is argued by the respondent here that it has no effect at all and that the appellant's claim was barred by limitation on October 20th and she did not avail herself of the time given her for enforcing her claim against the insolvent on October 22nd. On behalf of the appellant it is argued that when the adjudication took place on the 22nd October, no further steps could reasonably be taken by the appellant and that her claim was one to be dealt with in the insolvency. What has got to be considered is the meaning of s. 46 (3) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. That states that all debts to which the debtor is subject when he is adjudged an insolvent shall be deemed to be debts provable in insolvency. It is argued on behalf of the appellant that on the 22nd October this was a debt to which the debtor was subject and that being so, it was provable in insolvency. It seems to me that at any rate throughout the 22nd October this was a debt to which the debtor was subject and the question as to whether or not it was provable cannot depend upon the action taken thereafter by the creditor. It is argued by the respondent that it was a conditional debt only, conditional on the appellant filing a suit against the debtor. In my view, on that date the appellant had an enforceable claim against the debtor and the debtor had a debt which could be enforced against him. We have now got to consider whether it was necessary, the adjudication having supervened, for the creditor to file a suit. After the adjudication of a debtor all his property by reason of s. 17 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act vests in the Official Assignee and no one can bring any suit to enforce any right against the property without the leave of the court. It is argued here that, notwithstanding this vesting of the insolvent's property in the Official Assignee, the appellant should have come to court on the 22nd October after the adjudication of the insolvent and applied for leave to file a suit. That would have meant, of course, that he would have had to pay court-fee on his plaint and that if, on an examination of his claim, it appeared to the Official Assignee that the claim was a good one, the filing of the suit would have been entirely unnecessary and would have cast upon the estate of the insolvent the burden of paying the costs of that plaint. A position somewhat similar, though the facts were slightly different arose in In re

General Rolling Stock Co. (1). In that case, which was a company winding-up case, it is true that it appears that the debt was not barred at the time of the making of the winding-up order but became time-barred during the pendency of the liquidation. It was held there that the creditor had a good claim. On page 649* James, L. J. says:

"After a winding-up order has been made, no action is to be brought by a creditor except by the special leave of the Court."

Here, after an adjudication no suit can be filed by a creditor against a debtor without the leave of the court. Then he proceeds:

"And it cannot have been the intention of the Legislature that special leave to bring an action should be given merely in order to get rid of the Statute of Limitations."

Here the obvious effect of filing a suit on the 22nd October would have been to deprive the debtor of his plea that the suit was barred by limitation. That seems to me to be the same thing as filing a suit for the purpose of getting rid of the Limitation Act; nor does it seem to me to make any difference at all that in that case there was at the time of the winding-up order a debt which was not barred by limitation. Here was an enforceable debt; before it could be enforced the adjudication happened and it seems to me to be quite an unreasonable thing to force a creditor under such circumstances to apply for the leave of the court to file a suit. Supposing the court refused leave, then, although the Limitation Act gave the creditor the right to file a suit and enforce his claim on that day, that right would be taken away by the action of the court. Another case to which reference can usefully be made is Ex parte Lancaster Banking Corporation, In re Westhy (2). There Bacon, C. J., says:

"When a bankruptcy ensues, there is an end to the operation of that Statute with reference to debtor and creditor. The debtor's rights are established and the creditor's rights are established in the bankruptcy and the Statute of Limitations has no application at all to such a case, or to the principles by which it is governed."

It is perfectly clear that but for the intervention of the insolvency here, if the creditor did not file the suit on October 22nd she could not enforce her claim. What I have said here must not be taken as meaning that s. 4 of the Limitation Act extends the period of limitation. It does not; it merely gives an extended time to a creditor in which to enforce his claim under certain circumstances. For these reasons,

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a defendants' appeal and arises out of a suit for sale on a mortgage dated the 1st of June, 1916. Lachmi Narayan and others were possessed of 2 bighas 13 biswas of fixed rate holding in Mouza Sipahi. On the 27th of May, 1912, they made a usufructuary mortgage of this property in favour of Balbhaddar. On the 1st of June, 1916, they made a simple mortgage of the said property in favour of Murlidhar, father of the plaintiffs for Rs. 400. On the 30th of August, 1921, they executed another simple mortgage of the same property in favour of Balbhaddar's grandson in consideration of Rs. 1,425. It has been found as a fact by the court below and the finding is not challenged in appeal that the real mortgagee under this document was Balbhaddar himself. The details of the mortgage consideration were as follows:—Rs. 499 were left with the mortgagee for payment to himself on account of his prior mortgage dated the 27th of May, 1912, and a sum of Rs. 799 was left with him for payment to Murlidhar on account of the mortgage bond now in suit. On the 31st of August, 1921, the mortgagors executed another simple mortgage in favour of Balbhaddar of the fixed rate holding and also a house.

The suit was resisted by Balbhaddar on the ground that he was entitled to hold as a shield against the plaintiff his prior mortgage, dated the 27th of May, 1912. This plea was replied by the court of first instance and the defendant-appellant has lost in all courts.

Under the contract, dated the 30th of August, 1921, Balbhaddar had undertaken not only to pay up his own mortgage dated the 27th of May, 1912, but also to pay up the mortgage bond in favour of the plaintiff, dated the 1st of June, 1916. He never paid this mortgage. Having regard to the nature and character of the transaction as embodied in the document, dated the 30th of August, 1921, it is patently clear that it could never have been in the contemplation of Balbhaddar that he should use his mortgage bond, dated the 27th of May, 1912, as a shield as against the plaintiff because the parties had agreed that both the mortgages of 1912 and 1916 should be completely wiped off. Whether a mortgage paid off is kept alive or extinguished depends upon the intention of the parties and ordinarily such an intention is to be presumed where it would be for the preservation or protection of one's contract against a third party. This is the settled law and is founded upon considerations of justice, equity and good conscience. But this rule is not to be extended to the case of a transferee, who has flagrantly failed to carry out his obligation in full under his contract with his transferor. Where a transferee of immoveable property, having a prior lien upon the property, purchases the property with a distinct stipulation with his vendor to discharge with the purchase money left in deposit with him his own lien and that of another mortgagee (of a date subsequent to his own) and the transferee satisfies his own incumbrance but fails to discharge the other incumbrance, he cannot be allowed in equity to use his paid up mortgage or charge as a shield against the latter [Muhammad Sadiq v. Ghaus Muhammad (1), Makhan Lal v. Nathi (2)] We are of opinion that the view taken by the learned Single Judge of this court is perfectly correct. We accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

THE CENTRAL BANK OF INDIA, LTD.—

RESPONDENT.

Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), s. 131 —Negligence of collecting Bank, test of.

Whether or not a collecting Bank is guilty of negligence under s. 131, Negotiable Instruments Act, is a question the determination of which depends upon the particular circumstances of each case. The test of negligence is whether the transaction of paying in any given cheque is so out of the ordinary course that it ought to arouse doubts in the Bankers' mind and cause them to make enquiry. [p. 826, col. 1]

First Appeal from a judgment of this Court on the Original Side in Civil Regular No. 346 of 1930

Mr. Leach, for the Appellant.

Mr. F. Jeejeebhoy, for the Respondent.

Page, C. J.—This is a suit brought by the drawer of a crossed cheque against the respondent Bank to recover damages for conversion or, in the alternative, for the value of the cheque as money had and received by the respondent Bank to the plaintiff's use. The material section of the Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), is s. 131, which runs as follows :

"A Banker who has in good faith and without negligence received payment for a customer of a cheque crossed generally or specially to himself shall not, in case the title to the cheque proves defective, incur any liability to the true owner of the cheque by reason only of having received such payment."

Now, it is not contended on behalf of the appellant that in connection with the receipt of this cheque by the respondent Bank the Bank was not acting bona fide. The allegation of the appellant is that in receiving payment of this cheque and crediting the proceeds to the account of a customer the respondent Bank was guilty of negligence. It is common ground that the customer to whose account the proceeds were credited had no title to the cheque, and that, as the cheque was not delivered to the Corporation, the plaintiff at all material times was the true owner of the cheque within s. 131. In these circumstances the plaintiff alleged that the respondent Bank were guilty of conversion, or, in the alternative, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the proceeds of the cheque as money had and received to his use.

It appears that on the 12th October the cheque in question was drawn on Dawsons Bank, Limited, Rangoon, in favour of the Corporation of Rangoon or order for Rs. 2,361-12-0. It was drawn on behalf of the plaintiff J. G. Robinson by his attorney R. S. Dantra, and it is common ground that Mr. Dantra had authority to draw this cheque as the attorney and agent of the plaintiff. The cheque was drawn in favour of the Corporation of Rangoon in payment of Municipal taxes due from the plaintiff to the Corporation. Now, Mr. Dantra had in his employment a clerk, Manilal Shivchand Shah, who was known to Mr. Dantra, and to those who worked with and under him, as M. S. Shah. It so happened that Mr. Dantra at the time when this cheque was drawn was also the agent of Dawsons Bank, and there can be little doubt that Manilal Shivchand Shah had become acquainted, at any rate to some extent, with the nature of the business carried on by Bankers. Mr. Dantra having drawn this cheque on behalf of the plaintiff in favour of the Corporation, handed the cheque to Shah with a direction that Shah should deliver it to the Corporation. Shah failed to do so, and nothing more is known about the history of this cheque until the 14th of December, 1929, when Shah, having forged what purported to be an endorsement on the cheque on behalf of the Corporation, proceeded to the respondent Bank, and tendered this cheque over the counter to one of the clerks of the Bank for collection. At the same time Manilal Shivchand instructed the Bank to credit the proceeds of the cheque to a savings Bank account which he had opened with the respondent Bank on the 8th of October, 1929, in favour of an infant girl, Savitabai, of whom he asserted that he was the guardian. The clerk to whom the cheque was tendered accepted the cheque; endorsed it with a rubber stamp to this effect "Payee's endorsement guaranteed. For the Central Bank of India, Ltd., Agent," and took the cheque to one Tracy, who was the assistant accountant of the respondent Bank, and at that time was acting as the chief accountant. What Tracy did after he had received the cheque may be stated in his own words :

"I received Ex. 'A' (i.e., the cheque in suit from Maung Nyun Pe (the clerk to whom the cheque had been tendered by Shah), with several other cheques. I remember receiving this cheque Ex. A, and I noticed that it was to order and was a crossed cheque payable to the Corporation of Rangoon. I also noticed that it purported to be endorsed by the Chief Superintendent of the Corporation of Rangoon. I did not know that there was such an official as the Chief Superintendent of the Corporation of Rangoon. I knew that Manilal Shivchand was not a person whose endorsement I could guarantee. That was why I did not sign the guarantee-stamp. I knew that there was a Savings Bank account which Manilal Shivchand had opened in the name of his infant daughter. I had no time to enquire why Manilal Shivchand was paying into this Savings Bank account a crossed cheque drawn in favour of the Corporation of Rangoon.

"Q : The reason that you did not enquire why this crossed cheque drawn in favour of the Corporation was being paid into the Savings Bank account of this infant was that you had no time ?

"A : I knew that the cheque had been drawn by Mr. R. S. Dantra, who was the agent of Dawsons Bank and I thought that he would be in the best position to know whether the cheque was properly endorsed. I knew his signature very well. Those are the reasons why I did not enquire. I did not communicate with Mr. Dantra when the cheque had been presented to me for signature. I passed them on to the cashier for collection, I do not know who was the cashier of Drawsons Bank at that time. The money was collected by my Bank from Dawsons Bank and credited to the Savings Bank account."

The cheque, without the guarantee of the payee's endorsement having been signed on behalf of the respondent Bank, was returned to Dawsons Bank, and cleared the same day through Lloyd's Bank, and the proceeds of the cheque were immediately credited to the Savings Bank account of the infant of whom Manilal Shivchand had stated that he was the guardian. On the 9th December, when this cheque for Rs. 2,361.12 0 was credited to the Savings Bank account of Savitabai, that account stood in credit to an amount of Rs. 5. On the 10th December Manilal Shivchand drew out of the Savings Bank account Rs. 2,360 leaving a balance of Rs. 6.12-0. This account was not further operated upon. In January, 1930, Manilal Shivchand Shah absconded, and when the Corporation served upon the plaintiff a further demand for payment of the taxes the fraud was discovered.

The question that falls to be determined is whether in those circumstances the respondent Bank in receiving payment of this cheque, and crediting the proceeds to the Savings Bank account of the infant Savitabai, was guilty of negligence.

Now, what is the duty of a collecting Bank having regard to the terms of s. 131 of the Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881). In Commissioners of Taxation v. English, Scottish and Australian Bank, Limited (1), Lord Dunedin, delivering the judgment of the Privy Council, observed : "In the case of Commissioners of State Savings Bank v. Fearnley, Whirl & Co. (2), in the High Court of Australia, Isaacs, J., says: 'Apart from the well-established rule that whether or not the evidence establishes that a person acts without negligence is a question of fact, the legal principles found in Morrison v. London County and Westminster Bank (3) and relevant to the present case are (i) that the question should in strictness be determined separately with regard to each cheque; (ii) that the test of negligence is whether the transaction of paying in any given cheque was so out of the ordinary course that it ought to have aroused doubts in the Banker's mind, and caused them to make inquiry.' If there be inserted after the words 'given cheque' the words 'coupled with the circumstances antecedent and present,' their Lordships think this is an accurate statement of the law."

Applying the law thus laid down to the facts of the present case the question is whether in the circumstances disclosed in the evidence the respondent Bank was guilty of negligence in receiving payment of the cheque in suit.

On behalf of the respondent Bank it is contended that however suspicious might be the circumstances in connection with the presentation of a crossed cheque for collection, the collecting Bank is under no obligation to make any enquiry for the purpose of ascertaining whether the cheque is a genuine cheque, or whether the endorsements upon the cheque are genuine or forged endorsements. It is urged that the sole obligation of a collecting Bank, if it suspects, or is put on enquiry as to, the genuineness of a crossed cheque or the endorsement thereon is to refrain from signing the guarantee of the collecting Bank that the endorsements are genuine, and that if it forwards the cheque to the paying Bank in that condition it is absolved from further responsibility in the matter. It is contended that in such circumstances, according to the usage of Bankers obtaining in Rangoon, the paying Bank must elect to pay or not to pay the cheque on its own responsibility and if it pays the cheque the collecting Bank is at liberty, however extravagant the endorsements on the cheque might be, to credit the proceeds to the account of the customer who had tendered it for collection. In the first place I am not satisfied that any such usage has been proved in the present case. Whether the usage exists or not is a question of fact, and the usage upon which the respondent Bank relies is that in the case of every crossed cheque the collecting Bank signs a form guaranteeing the genuineness of the endorsement on the cheque. The only evidence in support of such an usage is to be found in the testimony of Mr. Thakur, the agent of the respondent Bank. In corroboration of the usage as stated by Mr. Thakur reliance was placed on the evidence of Mr. Wing, the accountant of Dawsons Bank. The evidence of Mr. Wing, however, is not to the same effect. He stated that "If there is any irregularity in the cheque it is usual for the collecting Bank to guarantee the endorsements. If there is no such guarantee it is the usual practice to return the cheque unpaid. If there is no such guarantee the paying Bank pays the amount of the cheque on its own responsibility." I am not satisfied upon the evidence adduced in the present case that an usage in the form stated by Mr. Thakur has been proved, but in my opinion, assuming that an usage of this nature obtains amongst Bankers in Rangoon, whatever rights or obligations may arise thereunder as between the collecting and the paying Bank, conformity to such an usage would not ipso facto, as held by the learned trial Judge, absolve the collecting Bank from all further responsibility in connection with the receipt of a crossed cheque. In every case the test to be applied in order to ascertain whether the collecting Bank was guilty of negligence within s. 131 of the Negotiable Instruments Act is that laid down by Lord Dunedin in Commissioners of Taxation v. English, Scottish and Australian Bank, Limited (1).

Now, did the collecting Bank in the present case, having regard to the facts disclosed in the evidence, take such reasonable care in connection with the payment of this cheque as a member of the mercantile community conversant with banking business would be expected to take? What information had the respondent Bank in its possession when Manilal Shivchand tendered this cheque for collection? Manilal Shivchand was known to the accountant Tracy whose duty it was to exercise reasonable care in this matter on behalf of the respondent Bank. Tracy knew that Manilal Shivchand was merely a clerk, and in his evidence Tracy admitted that Manilal Shivchand was not a person upon whose statement the Bank would guarantee the endorsement on a cheque. The respondent Bank knew that this crossed cheque had been drawn in favour of a public body, the Corporation of Rangoon, for Rs. 2,361-12-0. It knew that the cheque was being tendered for collection by Manilal Shivchand, a man for no substance.

It knew that the cheque was presented for collection with instructions that the proceeds should be credited to the Savings Bank account of an infant, of whom Manilal Shivchand claimed to be the guardian. And the Bank also knew that the cheque was endorsed with a rubber stamp "Chief Superintendent, Corporation of Rangoon," and an illegible scribble purporting to be the name of that official written in ink under the rubber stamp. I should have expected that a gentleman entrusted with the duties of the Chief Accountant of the respondent Bank would have been acquainted with the names and designation of the senior officials of the Corporation. As a matter of fact, there is no such official as the Chief Superintendent of the Corporation of Rangoon. But for the purpose of this case I will assume that the Chief Accountant of the respondent Bank was not to be deemed to have notice that there is not such an official as the Chief Superintendent of the Corporation of Rangoon. Tracy in his evidence stated that he did not know whether there was such an official or not, and there is no reason why his statement should not be believed. At any rate, the endorsement of the cheque would not have enlightened him, because what purported to be the signature of that official was a mere scribble that was wholly illegible.

In my opinion, however, the most casual perusal of the cheque ought to have aroused suspicion, and put the Bank on enquiry as to the genuineness of this endorsement, for it was a crossed cheque drawn in favour of a public body for Rs. 2,361-12-0, and tendered by a mere clerk for collection and payment into a small Savings Bank account opened by the clerk in favour of an infant of whom he was the guardian. In Commissioners of Taxation v. English, Scottish and Australian Bank, Limited (1) where the question was whether the Bank was negligent in crediting a customer's account with the proceeds of a stolen bearer cheque drawn in payment of taxes, Lord Dunedin observed:

"If the cheque had been in a different form things might well have been otherwise. Their Lordships cannot help remarking that to a certain extent the appellants have themselves to think for what has happened, owing to the terms of their instructions. If they had insisted that in the case of payments made at the office, as they did not insist in the case of drafts sent by post, the cheques should be made payable to the Commissioners of Taxation, then there would have been something on the face of the cheque to arouse inquiry. The fact that the cheque was to bearer distinguishes this case from Commissioners of State Savings Bank v. Permewan, Wright & Co. (2)

In that case, in the case of thirty-six cheques, the cheques were drawn in favour of the Commissioners, or had such markings on them as showed as they were drawn for the purpose of paying duties. This was held, their Lordships think rightly, to be a circumstance which ought to have put the Bank on inquiry when such cheques were presented by a private individual."

Again, in Ross v. London County Westminster and Parr's Bank, Limited (4), Bailhache, J. stated that

"the question is whether the employees of a Bank authorised to receive its customers' cheques, to whom a private customer presents for collection a crossed cheque payable to and endorsed by a public official, ought, before treating the customer as the person entitled to the cheque and receiving payment of it for him, to make inquiry as to the customer's title to the cheque, and in the event of their failing to do so are guilty of negligence..... It is, therefore, necessary to consider whether a Bank cashier of ordinary intelligence and care on having these cheques presented to him by a private customer of the Bank would be informed by the terms of the cheques themselves that it was open to doubt whether the customer had a good title to them. Each of the cheques in question was drawn payable to—"The Officer in charge, Estates Office, Canadian Overseas Military Forces," and was endorsed by that officer under the same description. Each cheque bore upon its face the fact that it was payable to the officer of a public department and not to a private person, and the endorsement on each cheque showed that it was being negotiated by that officer. It is not in accordance with the ordinary course of business that a cheque so drawn and endorsed should be used for the purpose of paying the debt of a private individual. It was highly improbable that the officer-in-charge of the Estates Office would hand to de Volpi cheques in this form with the intention that the latter should pay them into his private account. It, therefore, seems to me that when de Volpi presented these cheques with a view to having them credited to his private account a cashier of ordinary intelligence and experience should have been put on inquiry whether or not the credit ought to be made. I have come to the conclusion that the employees of the defendants in treating de Volpi as the person entitled to the cheques and in receiving or assisting in receiving payment of the cheques for him without making any inquiry whether he was entitled to the cheques, failed to exercise due care and were guilty of negligence, and, therefore, that the defendants are not within the protection of s. 82."

In that case the Statute that was applicable was s. 82 of the English Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, which is to the same effect as s. 131 of the Indian Negotiable Instruments Act. I respectfully agree with the observations of Bailhache, J., in Ross's case, (4) confirmed as they were by the Court of Appeal in A. L. Underwood, Limited v. Bank of Liverpool and Martins (5) and applying the test laid down by Lord Dunedin in Commissioners of Taxation v. English, Scottish and Australian Bank, Limited (7), I am clearly of opinion that the respondent Bank on receiving the cheque in suit tendered for collection by Manilal Shivchand in order that the proceeds should be credited to Savitabai's account was under an obligation to make enquiry as to whether the customer was entitled to receive the proceeds of this cheque, having regard to the form of the cheque and its endorsement, and the circumstances in which it was tendered for collection. But the case does not rest there, because at the time when it was tendered for collection there was also a further endorsement on this cheque "Pay signature guarantee for Savitabai Manilal Shivchand." Now, although these words do not make sense if strictly read, it may be taken, I think, that Manilal Shivchand endorsed the cheque in this way because he thought it well to volunteer his personal guarantee of the genuineness of the endorsement which purported to be that of the Chief Superintendent of the Corporation of Rangoon. Why should Manilal Shivchand have volunteered to give such a guarantee unless he was afraid that the respondent Bank, acting with such prudence as a Banker is bound to exercise in the course of his business, would suspect the genuineness of what purported to be the endorsement of the Corporation of Rangoon? Tracy observing this endorsement by Manilal Shivchand on the back of the cheque, at once decided that he could not act upon such an endorsement, or place any reliance on a guarantee by such a person as Manilal Shivchand. In those circumstances, in my opinion the respondent Bank was bound to satisfy itself that Savitabai was entitled to receive payment of this cheque before it credited the proceeds to the Savings Bank account that had been opened in her name.

Now, with all this information in its possession creating suspicion as to the genuineness of this endorsement, were any enquiries instituted by Tracy or any one else on behalf of the respondent Bank to ascertain whether the endorsement was genuine or a forgery, or whether Savitabai was entitled to receive payment of the cheque? None whatever. Why not? Because the respondent Bank, forsooth, contended that it was absolved from all responsibility in connection with the collection of this cheque after having seen the cheque to Dawsons Bank without a guarantee by the Bank that the endorsement was genuine. Such a contention in my opinion, is wholly misconceived.

and unsustainable. Why was it that this cheque was paid? I am satisfied and hold that it was paid because of the negligent conduct of the respondent Bank. The simplest inquiry would have disclosed that the endorsement on this cheque, purporting to be that of the Corporation, was a forgery. If the respondent Bank had sent the cheque to the officers of the Corporation of Rangoon for perusal and information as to whether the endorsement purporting to be that of the Chief Superintendent of the Corporation of Rangoon was genuine or not, they would have received an answer back in less than ten minutes. The answer would have been that the endorsement was a forgery, and the reasonable suspicion as to its genuineness that the respondent Bank had entertained would have been justified. Or, again, if the respondent Bank had informed Dawsons Bank of the facts in its possession in connection with the receipt of this cheque, and the circumstances in which it had been tendered for collection by Manilal Shivchand, no one can doubt that Dawsons Bank would not have paid the cheque. Mr. Tracy in his evidence stated that he made no enquiries because he had "no time", and it was urged by the learned Advocate on behalf of the respondent Bank that business could not be carried on if Banks were bound to investigate the right of their customers to receive the proceeds of all cheques that were tendered for collection. No doubt that is so, and I do not suggest that Banks are under any such obligation, but the answer to the respondent's contention is that "if Banks for fear of offending their customers will not make inquiries into unusual circumstances, they must take with the benefit of not annoying their customer the risk of liability because they do not inquire;"

per Scrutton, L J., in A. L. Underwood, Limited v. Bank of Liverpool and Martins (5). Now, this case turns solely upon an issue of fact, and no question of law is involved, for whether or not a collecting Bank is guilty of negligence within s. 131 of the Negotiable Instruments Act must depend upon the particular circumstances obtaining in each case. In the present case, with all due respect to the learned trial Judge, I have no doubt that the respondent Bank was guilty of negligence in receiving payment of this cheque for Savitabai, and that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree. The result is that the appeal is allowed, the decree of the trial court set aside, and a decree passed in favour of the plaintiff for the sum claimed, and interest thereon at 6 per cent. from the date of judgment, and costs in both courts. The learned Advocate on behalf of the appellant is entitled to special costs as awarded to the learned Advocate for the respondent Bank in the trial Court.

AKBAR ALI—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 62, 116—Suit to enforce covenant for indemnity in mortgage-deed—Article applicable—Cause of action—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 8—Application for personal decree—Sale, whether condition precedent.

Where a mortgage-deed contained a provision that in consequence of a dispute raised by a third person any loss is occasioned to the mortgagee the person and other property of the executant will be liable to make good the loss and a third person having obtained a declaratory decree that the property could not be sold in execution of the decree obtained upon the mortgage, the mortgagee instituted a suit for breach of the covenant of indemnity contained in the mortgage :

Held, that the suit was not governed by Art. 62 but by Art. 116 of the Limitation Act and the cause of action arose when it was declared that the plaintiff was not entitled to have the house sold in execution of his decree. [p. 830, col. 2.]

The fact that a consent decree had been passed on a mortgage-deed cannot have the effect of making a covenant for indemnity contained in the deed inoperative. [p. 831, col. 1.]

Where a decree for sale becomes inoperative on the mortgagor being declared not to have been the owner of the mortgage property, O. XXXIV, r. 8, Civil Procedure Code, can have no application. [p. 831, col. 2.]

Second Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Agra, dated the 30th April, 1929.

Mr. A. M. Khawaja, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. Dharam Das, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the defendants and arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff respondent for recovery of Rs. 3,580.10 as compensation for breach of a covenant contained in a mortgage-deed executed by the defendant-appellants in his favour. Both the courts have decreed the suit. The facts are that the defendants executed, on the 15th March, 1923, a deed of simple mortgage for Rs. 1,600 in favour of the plaintiff, hypothecating a house situate in Firozabad, District Agra. The plaintiff brought Suit No. 10 of 1925 in the court of the Subordinate Judge, Agra, for recovery of principal and interest due under the aforesaid deed by sale of the mortgaged-property. A decree for sale under O. XXXIV, r. 4, Civil Procedure Code, was passed in favour of the plaintiff, Ismail Khan, the first cousin of the defendants, objected, in execution proceedings, to the house being sold on the allegation that it belonged to him and not to the mortgagors, the defendants. His objection was disallowed, and thereupon he instituted a regular suit for the declaration of his right to the house in question, which was dismissed by the 1st court but decreed, by the court of the District Judge on appeal, on the 15th February, 1928. It was declared that the house in question could not be sold in execution of the decree obtained by the plaintiff on foot of his mortgage-deed. Consequently the decree became infructuous. A suit for a simple money decree was barred on that date.

The suit, which has given rise to this appeal, was instituted on the 10th July, 1928, for damages for breach of a covenant contained in the mortgage-deed, which runs thus:—

"If, in consequence of any act done by me, the executant, or my heirs or in consequence of a dispute raised by a third person, any loss is occasioned to the mortgagee as regards the sum due under the deed, the person and the other property of the executant shall be made liable to make good the loss and costs etc".

The cause of action for the relief claimed by the plaintiff is said to have accrued to him on the 15th February, 1928, when the house mortgaged by the defendant appellants under the deed, dated 15th March, 1923, was declared to be the property of Ismail Khan and not liable to be sold in execution of the decree in favour of the plaintiff.

The main contention put forward in appeal is that the plaintiff's claim, which is in substance a claim to the original debt with interest, is barred by limitation. It is argued that, in so far as the plaintiff is claiming to recover money advanced to the defendants, Art. 62 of the Indian limitation Act is applicable and that the period of limitation began to run from the date of the deed. That article provides for suits "for money payable by the defendant to the plaintiff for money received by the defendant for the plaintiff's use". We are clearly of opinion that that article has no application to the suit as framed by the plaintiff-respondent. It is not one for recovery of any money advanced by the plaintiff to the defendant for the use of the former, but seeks to enforce a covenant which is in the nature of indemnity. The learned Counsel for the defendant-appellants referred to a large number of rulings in which Art. 62 was applied to cases in which the plaintiff sought to recover the consideration paid by him under a mortgage or a lease, which failed. In none of those cases did the plaintiff seek to enforce a specific covenant of indemnity contained in the deed in determining the particular article of the Limitation Act applicable to a case much depends on the nature of the plaintiff's claim. If the plaintiff is entitled so to frame his suit as to make a certain article giving a favourable period of limitation applicable, it is not a valid objection to say that he could have framed it otherwise so as to make a less favourable article applicable. We should, therefore, find an appropriate article applicable to a suit for compensation for breach of a covenant of indemnity. In Collector of Mirzapur v. Dawan Singh (1), Art. 116 has been applied and, in our opinion, correctly. It provides for suits "for compensation for the breach of a contract in writing registered". The only question is as to when the period of six years, provided for by it, begins to run. It was contended that as the mortgaged-property did not belong to the mortgagor, a breach of the covenant occurred on the date of the mortgage. We do not think this argument can hold good in the circumstances of the case before us. The covenant already quoted entitles the plaintiff to sue for compensation on loss being occasioned to him in consequence of a dispute raised by a third-party. The plaintiff's right to recover damages, therefore, accrued when loss was occasioned to him in consequence of a dispute raised by Ismail Khan for the first time in execution proceedings taken in 1926, that is, within three years before the present suit was instituted. The loss was occasioned to the plaintiff when it was declared in the suit brought by Ismail Khan that the plaintiff-respondent was not entitled to have the house sold in execution of his own decree. This was on the 15th February, 1928, well within 3 years. It was on this date that the plaintiff was deprived of his security and of the right to have the mortgaged house sold in execution of his decree for sale. In these circumstances, we hold that the plaintiff's suit, which is governed by Art. 116 of the

(1) 30 A. 400; A. W. N. (1908) 160; 5 A. L. J 486.

Limitation Act, is within limitation, whether it is reckoned from the date of Ismail Khan's objection or the date of the decree nullifying the decree in favour of the plaintiff.

The lower Appellate Court has applied Art. 97 of the Limitation Act, holding that the consideration paid by the plaintiff-respondent under the mortgage-deed executed by the defendant-appellants in his favour failed on a decree being passed in favour of Ismail Khan. The learned Counsel for the appellants made reference to a number of cases bearing on Art. 97; but it is not necessary for us to consider the applicability of Art. 97 or of the cases relied on by him in the view of the case we have taken.

It was also argued by the learned Counsel for the appellants that the decree obtained by the plaintiff-respondent for sale of the house mortgaged to him was based on a compromise and that the mortgage-deed having thus become merged in the compromise and the decree based thereon, no covenant contained in the mortgage deed can be enforced. We are satisfied that this contention is not well founded. It may be correct to say that the mortgage-debt became converted into a judgment debt; but this cannot have the effect of making all collateral covenants contained in the mortgage deed inoperative. The compromise related to the controversy in the suit, namely, the amount to which the plaintiff-respondent was entitled and his right to obtain satisfaction of such amount by sale of the mortgaged-property. It did not relate to any other matter, nor did the decree passed on the basis of such compromise. There was no question as regards the plaintiff's right to recover compensation for loss occasioned to him in consequence of a dispute raised by a third person. For these reasons, we hold that the covenant now sued on was unaffected by the compromise and the decree passed in pursuance thereof.

It was further contended that the only remedy which the plaintiff respondent had was to obtain a decree over, under O. XXXIV, r. 6, Civil Procedure Code. We do not think that the plaintiff could obtain a simple money decree under that rule before the sale of the mortgaged-property and the sale proceedings proving insufficient to satisfy the mortgage money. Where a decree for sale becomes inoperative on the mortgagor being declared not to have been the owner of the mortgaged-property at the date of the mortgage, O. XXXIV, r. 6, can have no application.

The appeal fails on all the grounds urged on behalf of the appellants. It is accordingly dismissed with costs, including Counsel's fees in this court on the higher scale.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), s. 25—Suit for custody of ward—Maintainability—Act, whether exhaustive.

Though the Guardians and Wards Act does not purport to be exhaustive of all questions that arise with respect to the custody of a minor yet in cases to which s. 25 applies it is incumbent upon the guardian to proceed by way of application under the Guardians and Wards Act, and not by a regular suit. Sham Lal v. Bindo (2), Besant v. Narayaniah (3), Utma Kuar v. Bhagwanta Kuar (4), Arunachellam Pillay v. Iyama (5) and Sathi v. Ramandi Pandaram (6), followed. Ma Shwe Ge v. Maung Shwe Pan (1), Sharifa v. Munekhan (7), Achraillal Jekisandas v. Chimanlal Parbhudas (8), and Mathuralaban v. D. Tewary (9), distinguished. [p. 832, col. 1.]

First Appeal from the judgment of this Court on the Original Side in Civil Regular No. 605 of 1930.

Mr. Rauf, for the Appellant.

Miss Dantra, for the Respondent.

Page, C. J.—This is a suit by a Hindu husband for an order that his minor wife should be restored to his custody as her guardian. The judgment of the lower Court and of this Court proceeds upon the footing (i) that the suit was brought by the plaintiff as the guardian of his wife and not otherwise; and (ii) that the plaintiff claimed that the custody of his wife should be restored to him as she had been removed from his custody by her parents. That this is the plaintiff's cause of action is clear from para. 3 of the plaint, and para. 7 of the written statement.

The learned trial Judge held (i) that the plaintiff was a major at the time when he filed his suit; and (ii) that, having regard to the provisions of the Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), the remedy of the plaintiff lay in an application under s. 25 of the Guardians and Wards Act, and not by filing a regular suit. The suit was dismissed.

At the hearing of the appeal it was urged by the learned Advocate for the appellant that, although the appellant was entitled to apply that the custody of his wife should be restored to him under the Guardians and Wards Act, he had an alternative right to file a regular suit in that behalf.

Now, it is common ground that before the passing of the Guardians and Wards Act the plaintiff would have been entitled to file a regular suit for the restoration of the custody of his minor wife, and it is urged on behalf of the appellant that the right which he possessed before the passing of the Act was not taken away by express terms or necessary implication by the Guardians and Wards Act. The Guardians and Wards Act does not purport to be exhaustive of all questions that arise with respect to the custody of a minor, but, in my opinion, in cases to which s. 25 applies it is incumbent upon the guardian to proceed by way of application under the Guardians and Wards Act, and not by a regular suit. The case is concluded, in my opinion, against the appellant both on principle and by authority. As was pointed out in Ma Shwe Ge v. Maung Shwe Pan (1), and Sham Lal v. Bindo (2) to hold that there were concurrent or alternative remedies open to a guardian who sought the restoration of the custody of a minor would lead to great inconvenience, for it might be that there would be subsisting at the same time an order made in a suit by one person claiming to be the guardian of a minor for restoration of the minor to his custody, and also an order made on an application under the Guardians and Wards Act by another person claiming to be the guardian of the minor for an order that the custody of the minor should be restored to him. In my opinion the object of the Legislature in enacting s. 25 of the Guardians and Wards Act was that in cases to which that section applied the guardian should be bound to seek redress as provided in the Act, and not otherwise. I am of opinion that the case is also concluded against the appellant by authority. In Besant v. Narayaniah (3) Lord Parker, in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council, laid down that

"the District Court in which the suit was instituted had no jurisdiction over the infants except such jurisdiction as was conferred by the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890."

That was a case in which a natural guardian sought to recover the custody of his minor sons. Prior to Besant's case (3) the same view had been expressed by the Allahabad High Court in Sham Lal v. Bindo (2) and in Utma Kuar v. Bhagwanta Kuar (4); and after the decision of the Privy Council in Besant v. Narayaniah (3), the Chief Court of Lower Burma in Arunachellam Pillay v. Iyama (5) held that the effect of the ruling of the Privy Council in that case was that proceedings by a guardian for restoration of the custody of a minor must be taken under the Guardians and Wards Act, and not by way of a separate suit. In Sathi v. Ramandi Pandaram (6) Wallis, C. J., when considering the effect of Besant v. Narayaniah (3) observed that :

"The question for decision was whether a civil suit not under the Guardians and Wards Act, would lie in the Civil Court. The Privy Council held that it would not, and assigned as the sole but sufficient reason for so holding the fact that the District Court had no jurisdiction in the case except under the Guardians and Wards Act. This I feel bound to construe as a ruling that the jurisdiction conferred by the Guardians and Wards Act was exclusive, and that the right of proceeding independently by civil suit no longer existed."

On the other hand the learned Advocate on behalf of the appellant referred to Shrifat v. Munekhan (7) in which case the Bombay High Court held that the remedy by way of a regular suit in a proceeding in which an application might have been made under the Guardians and Wards Act, was not ousted by that Act; but Jenkins, C. J., in the course of his judgment, observed that in so holding the Bombay Court was concluded by an earlier decision of that Court, and his Lordship added :

"It appears to me under the circumstances profitless to enter on any discussion of the question; for even if we disagreed with that decision we could only refer the matter to a Full Bench. When, however, the Legislature comes to amend Act VIII of 1890 (which I trust may be at no distant date), it will, I think, be worthy of consideration whether the procedure under the Act should not be explicitly substituted for an ordinary suit, and the position of a father at the same time made clear."

(7) 25 B. 574.

Jenkins, C. J., therefore, did not purport to express any opinion of his own as to whether, if the matter were open, he would have decided the question one way or the other. Reference was also made to Ma Shwe Ge v. Maung Shwe Pan (1) in which a Full Bench of the Chief Court came to the conclusion that in the circumstances of that case inasmuch as "the person who claims to be the natural guardian has never had the custody of the minor," it could not be held that a regular suit was barred. In Achattal Jekisandas v. Chimanlal Parbhudas (8) the Bombay High Court was "not prepared to hold that the dictum of the Privy Council in Annie Besant v. Narayaniah (3) to the effect that a suit inter partes is not the proper proceeding was intended to be of such general application as virtually to overrule the decision of this Court in Sharifa v. Mune Khan (7), and Scott, C. J., added that "s. 25 cannot apply to this case for the ward has never left or been removed from the custody of his guardian." In Mathuraban v. D. Tewary (9) Robinson, J. dissented from Arunachellam Pillai v. Iyama (5) and followed Ma Shwe Ge v. Maung Shwe Pan (4) but in Mathuraban v. D. Tewary (9) as in Ma Shwe Ge v. Maung Shwe Pan (1) s. 25 had no application, for the plaintiff had never had the custody of the minor. For these reasons, in my opinion, the law as laid down by the Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Sathi v. Ramandi Pandaram (6) was correct, and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 130, 135, 136—Muhammadan Law—Dower—Assignment of right of dower to legal practitioner—Validity—Right to dower, whether actionable claim—Actionable claim, meaning of.

A widow's right under the Muhammadan Law to recover her unpaid dower is an actionable claim as defined in s. 2 of the Transfer of Property Act and an assignment of such right to a legal practitioner is void under s. 136 of the said Act. Such a transfer cannot be treated as the transfer of the widow's right to possession inasmuch as the widow cannot transfer her right to possession alone without validly transferring her right to receive the dower debt. [p. 835, col. 2]

[The nature of a widow's right to dower under the Muhammadan Law discussed.]

Under the Transfer of Property Act as amended in 1900 a debt which otherwise amounts to an actionable claim does not cease to be such merely because the cause of action in respect thereof has not arisen, or the time for its payment has not arrived. *Shib Lal v. Second Appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 12th July, 1929.

Messrs P. L. Banerji and M. A. Aziz for the Appellant.

Mr. Zamir-ul-Haq, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This second appeal has arisen out of a suit brought by the plaintiff respondent for recovery of possession of a six anna share in village Bahrapur, District Fatehpur. The Subordinate Judge in whose Court the suit had been instituted, dismissed it but on appeal by the plaintiff it was decreed by the District Judge.

Village Bahrapur above mentioned belonged to Saghir Hasan, husband of Kulsum Bibi, defendant No. 2, and Munshi Amir Hasan Khan, a Vakil practising in Fatehpur, in equal shares. The two do not appear to belong to the same family, and the fact that they were co sharers may be due to circumstances which are not material for the purposes of this case. Saghir Hasan died in or about 1920, leaving his brother Nazir Hasan, plaintiff-respondent and Musammam Kulsum Bibi, defendant No. 2 as his heirs, the latter being entitled to one-fourth of Saghir Hasan's property, and the former to the remaining three-fourths. The widow, however, entered into possession of the entire 8 anna share belonging to her husband, and obtained mutation of names, as owner to the extent of 2 annas (one-fourth), and in lieu of dower to the extent of 6 annas (three-fourths). The plaintiff contested her claim in the proceedings for mutation, but was unsuccessful. He acquiesced in the order of the revenue court upholding the widow's right to remain in possession of the plaintiff's share till her dower debt was paid, she executed on the 22nd September 1925, a deed of sale in favour of defendant No. 1 the validity of which is in question in the present case.

The deed recites that a large sum of money was due to the executant, Musammam Kulsum Bibi, in respect of her unpaid dower debt, (the exact amount of which is not specified) and that she was in possession of 6 annas share in lieu thereof. The deed purports to convey the entire 8 anna share to the vendee in consideration of Rs. 3,875, part of which was left with the vendee. The deed also purports to assign to the vendee the vendor's right to recover her dower debt and the right to remain in possession of 6 anna share until it is paid. Defendant No. 1 obtained possession of the entire 8 anna sold by the defendant No. 2.

The present suit was instituted on the 18th May 1927 for recovery of possession of 6 anna share belonging to the plaintiff but previously held by the widow (defendant No. 2) in lieu of dower. The validity of the sale-deed so far as it relates to 6 anna share belonging to the plaintiff is impugned on the ground that defendant No. 2 had no right to transfer her dower debt and her right to possession of 6 anna share to defendant No. 1. According to the plaintiff the dower of defendant No. 2 stipulated at the time of her marriage with Saghir Hasan was no more than Rs. 1,700. It was pleaded by defendant No. 1 in defence that the dower of defendant No. 2 agreed to by her husband was Rs. 50,000, and that she was entitled to possession of her husband's share till the aforesaid amount was paid, which right she validly transferred to defendant No. 1.

The trial Court held that the dower of defendant No. 2 stipulated at her marriage with Saghir Hasan, was Rs. 50,000 and that she having transferred her right to receive dower as well as her right to retain possession of her husband's share in village Bahrampur in lieu of dower, the defendant No. 1 was entitled to remain in possession, the dower debt not having been paid by the plaintiff.

The learned District Judge took a contrary view in a well reasoned judgment holding that the widow's claim to dower is an actionable claim, as defined in the Transfer of Property Act, and that the defendant No. 1 being a legal practitioner was debarred from taking a transfer of such claim. Accordingly defendant No. 1 did not acquire the right to recover the dower debt and could not, for that reason, acquire an indefeasible right of possession of six anna share which was previously in the hands of the widow subject to the lien for her unpaid dower debt. As regards the amount of dower, the learned Judge held that the burden of proving the exact amount stipulated at the time of marriage lay on the widow, who failed to establish that it was Rs. 50,000. He laid stress on the recital in the sale-deed which did not specify the amount of dower but mentioned it generally as a large amount. Apparently the learned Judge was of opinion that the sum of Rs. 50,000 alleged in the written statement was the result of an after-thought.

It was contended before us by the learned Advocate for the defendant-appellant that the widow's right to recover her unpaid dower is not an actionable claim, as defined in the Transfer of Property Act. Reference was made to Shib Lal v. Azmatullah (1) and Aruna Chellam Chetti v. Subramaniam Chetti (2). In the first of these cases, which was decided by a Full Bench of this court in 1896, it was held 'that the term "actionable claim" as used in s. 130 of Act IV of 1882, means a claim in respect of which a cause of action has already matured and which, subject to procedure, may be enforced by suit'. The debt in question in that case was due under a simple mortgage payable after a specified date. It was held that a mortgage debt, before it became payable, was not an actionable claim. The second case follows the first. In view of subsequent legislation, which materially altered the definition of "actionable claim" both the above cases have become obsolete in relation to transactions entered into after 1900, when the Transfer of Property Act was amended. An actionable claim is now defined to mean,

"a claim to any debt, other than a debt secured by mortgage of immoveable property which the civil courts recognize as affording grounds for relief, whether such debt be existent, accruing, conditional or contingent."

In the Act as it stood before the amendment, s. 130 defined "actionable claim" as "a claim which the civil court recognises as affording grounds for relief whether a suit for its enforcement is or is not actually pending or likely to become necessary". A comparison of the two definitions makes it clear to us that there was room for argument before the amendment that a debt in respect of which no cause of action had arisen and which was not payable at the date of assignment did not amount to an actionable claim. The amended definition has excluded secured debts from the category of actionable claims on the one hand and included certain debts though they are 'accruing, conditional or contingent.' It is no longer possible to contend that a debt, which otherwise amounts to an actionable claim, is not such only because a cause of action in respect thereof has not arisen or the time for its payment has not arrived. Section 135 as it stood before the amendment and which was in question in Shib Lal v Azmatullah (1), was repealed. It is not necessary to pursue this aspect of the case further, as we are satisfied that a claim to unpaid dower debt is an actionable claim as now defined in s. 2 of the Transfer of Property Act. This being so, and the defendant No. 1 being a legal practitioner, s. 136, Transfer of Property Act, is undoubtedly applicable. It forbids a legal practitioner among others to buy any actionable claim. The prohibition being absolute, any transfer in defiance of s. 136 is calculated to defeat its provisions and as such is void.

(1) 18 A. 265; A. W. N. (1896) 80.

(2) 30 M. 235; 17 M. L. J. 87.

It was contended by the learned Advocate for the appellant that the transaction evidenced by the deed dated 22nd September, 1925 should not be viewed as (1) an assignment of dower debt by Musammam Kulsum Bibi and (2) a transfer of her right to possession, taking the two separately, and that it amounted only to a transfer of the widow's right to possession in lieu of dower. The argument was that the claim to dower debt became merged in the widow's right to retain possession and had no separate existence as an assignable right. It was emphasised that the widow could not institute a suit for recovery of her dower and that her only remedy in respect of it was to remain in possession till she was paid off. We are unable to accede to this argument. A widow in possession of her husband's property, if she obtained it peacefully and without force or fraud, is entitled to retain it till her dower is paid. No exception can be taken to this statement of the law on the authorities of this court. It implies the existence of the dower debt and the liability of the heirs to pay it before they can take possession of their shares. There is nothing to prevent a widow from instituting a suit for her dower for the purpose of obtaining a simple money decree against all the assets of her husband, including the property in her possession, at least by surrendering possession of such property in her hands. We refrain from deciding that she must in all cases surrender possession as a condition precedent to her obtaining a decree against the assets of her husband but we entertain no doubt that she can sue for her dower, if she is so advised and obtain a decree against the assets of her husband, subject to her claim being unaffected by the law of limitation. The right of a Muhammadan widow, who has entered into possession of her husband's property peacefully and without force or fraud in lieu of her dower debt has been held by this court to be heritable so as to entitle her heirs to remain in possession until the debt is satisfied. See Ali Bakhs v. Allahdad Khan (3). The possession of heirs who inherited not only her right to receive the dower but also her right to remain in possession is thus not open to question. It was also laid down in that case that a widow could transfer her right to possession, if she also assigned her right to receive the unpaid dower. One of the learned Judges observed that he knew of "no valid reason in law why she should not be entitled to transfer her debt together with her right to continue in possession". The heirs of the widow had, in that case, transferred part of their right to receive the dower and to possession of her husband's property to strangers, who were jointly in possession with them and were defendants in the suit brought by the heirs of the husband for possession. We are bound to follow the cases of this court, even if we thought differently, but as already stated we take exactly the same view. If the right to receive dower and the right to remain in possession of certain property in lieu of such dower are vested in the same person, he cannot be ousted by the heirs of the husband. If however the widow transfers her right to possession or the property itself, without transferring her right to receive dower the transferee cannot defend his right to possession as against the heirs qua the latter's share. The ownership being vested in the heir of the husband, the only person who can stand between him and what belongs to him is the person who is entitled to the dower and to possession of the property in lieu thereof. In the present case the defendant No. 1 who has not in law acquired the widow's right to receive dower, is not entitled to retain possession, which the widow could not transfer without validly transferring her right to receive the dower debt.

The result is that this appeal fails, and is dismissed with costs, including Counsel's fees in this court on the higher scale.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 34—Joint assault—Inference of common intention—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 439—Alteration of conviction—Conviction for minor offence—Power to alter for major offence.

Where several men assault another at one and the same time, each of them seeing that the others are assaulting also, the assault may be regarded as a common one though the impulse to assault may have arisen independently. [p. 836, col. 2.]

When the accused are charged under s. 325, Penal Code, but are convicted under a minor section, namely, s. 323 of the same Code, the Magistrate must be held to have acquitted them of the charge under s. 325 and the High Court in revision cannot alter the conviction into one under s. 325. Kishan Singh v. Emperor (1), followed. [p. 837, col. 1.]

Mr. B. C. Guha, for the Crown.

Mr. M. I. Khan, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The five respondents were sent up for trial under s. 325, Indian Penal Code, charges were framed against them under the same section, but the Magistrate who tried the case found them guilty under s. 323, Indian Penal Code, only and all of them paid fines, Rs. 30 each. The sentences were not appealable and no application in revision is filed by the respondent. The complainant however filed an application for revision before the District Magistrate and he has forwarded it to this Court to direct that the convictions under s. 323 should be altered into those under s. 325 read with s. 30 Indian Penal Code and that the fines may be refunded to the respondents, and in lieu thereof the respondents may be each sentenced to undergo 25 lashes. Before this Court the respondents have urged that the convictions should not be sustained.

The incident which gave rise to the proceedings was an assault upon one Lekraj. This man was undoubtedly very seriously assaulted in a street of Rangoon, and taken to the hospital with nine wounds. A bone in the right hand was broken, the right fabula was broken and he had four contused or lacerated wounds on the head, but fortunately his skull remained intact. He was seriously injured and received grievous hurt.

That the assault must have happened before a large number of witnesses there can be no doubt, but as happens so often only a few have come forward to give evidence for the prosecution. Four of them are Hindusthani Hindus like the victim of the assault but one of them Maung Hla Pe a Burman Buddhist appears to be quite impartial and he only identified Ebrahim of the five men who have been convicted as being among those who took part in this assault. The Magistrate for some reason says that he can be easily bought over but there is nothing on the face of this evidence which justifies this decision. A careful consideration of the evidence of the remaining prosecution witnesses however seems to me to justify the convictions of the accused.

The evidence given by the witnesses is to a certain extent confused, but in my opinion where a sudden affray takes place in which a large number of people are concerned, passers by do not begin to see what is happening before their brains are really attuned to observing and recording their impressions. By the time the affray is half way over they are really observing and noticing for the first time particular facts, if a man is slow in mind as at least one of these witnesses clearly was, his brain would hardly awaken to the fact that something really worthy of note is happening which should be observed carefully. I see no reason to hold that the learned Magistrate has come to a wrong conclusion in holding that the five respondents did take part in the assault on Lekraj. I do however, consider that he was wrong in convicting them only under s. 323, Indian Penal Code. He says that the assault was a sudden one and not a planned one, and that, therefore, the accused cannot be said to have assaulted Lekraj in furtherance of a common intention. This seems to suggest that each of the five accused acting entirely independently was moved to strike Lekraj and all happened to choose the same moment to commit their assault. The impulse to assault may have arisen independently, but when five men assault at one and the same time, each of them seeing that the other four are assaulting also, the assault in my opinion may be regarded as a common one. Their common intention was to hurt the victim of the assault. In this particular case any person who struck blows hard enough to cause the wounds on the head or to break the bones must, I think, be regarded as having the common intention to cause grievous hurt.

The order which the District Magistrate suggests the Court to pass is unfortunately illegal. The accused having been charged under s. 325 and convicted under a minor section, namely, s. 323, the Magistrate must be held to have acquitted them of the charge under s. 325, Indian Penal Code and this Court in revision cannot alter the conviction into one under s. 225 in consequence of the ruling in Kishan Singh v. Emperor (1). This being the case, the convictions must remain under s. 323 and this is not one of the conviction sections which in Burma can be punished with whipping. The result is unfortunate, as I consider that the punishment suggested by the learned District Magistrate would be eminently suitable. The assault however was a cowardly and a serious one and ruffianism of this kind must be put down. I therefore confirm the convictions but direct that each of the respondents do undergo three months' rigorous imprisonment, in addition to the fines which they have already paid.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Art. 17, (iii), Sch. I, Art. 1—Declaration as to priority—Appeal for cancelling declaration—Court-fee payable.

Where a suit for recovery of a certain sum of money from a company and debenture-holders of that company and for a declaration that the amount is recoverable in priority to the debentures was decreed and the debenture holders appealed to modify the decision of the Trial Court by refusing the declaration as to priority:

Held, that Art. 17 (iii) of the Court Fees Act did not apply and the court-fee as payable ad valorem under Sch. I, Art. 1 of the Court Fees Act on the decretal amount or on the value of their debentures whichever was less. [p. 838, col. 1.]

[Case-law discussed.]

Mr. Ram Nama Prasad, for the Appellants.

Judgment.—This is a reference under s. 5 of the Court Fees Act, 1870.

The suit was for recovery of Rs. 37,246 from the Agra United Mills Ltd., and from certain debenture-holders of that company, and for a declaration that the amount is recoverable in priority over the debentures in favour of defendants Nos 2 to 7.

The debenture holders have appealed to the High Court to modify the decision of the trial Court by refusing the declaration that the plaintiff's claim has priority over the debentures. The appeal is valued at Rs. 37,246 and a court-fee of Rs. 10 only has been paid. The question is, what is the proper court-fee payable on the memorandum of appeal.

The Stamp Reporter contends that an ad valorem fee on Rs. 37,246 amounting to Rs. 1,055 is payable. The appellants' learned Advocate contends that the appeal challenges nothing more than the declaratory portion of the trial Court's decree and the court-fee is governed by Art. 17 (iii) of the 2nd Schedule.

In my opinion, Art. 17 (iii) has no application to the facts of this case. That provision applies to a memorandum of appeal in a suit "to obtain a declaratory decree where no consequential relief is prayed." The present suit was of a very different nature. It was primarily a suit for money. It is true that a declaration was also prayed for, as a further relief, but the suit was obviously not for a mere declaration without consequential relief, so Art. 17 (iii) cannot apply. Moreover, the relief claimed in this appeal is not a mere declaration but a modification of the trial Court's decree, which is a substantial relief.

The appellants rely upon Chunia v. Ram Dial (1), Moti Singh v. Kaunsilla (2), Bagala Sundari Debi v. Prosanna Nath Mukherjee (3) and Shrimant Sagajirao v. Smith (4), but they are quite beside the point. They refer to the court-fee payable on the plaint in a suit which is held to be for a declaration pure and simple. Nekho Tewari v. Kishun Prasad Pandey (5) is also cited. The suit was for a declaration and for consequential relief in the form of a temporary injunction pending the disposal of the suit. A decree was granted for the declaration only. The court-fee on the defendants' appeal against this declaratory decree was held to be governed by Art. 17 Sch. II as the temporary injunction was granted at an early stage of the suit and there-after the suit was reduced into a mere suit for a declaration and it was tried as such. This ruling therefore, is also clearly distinguishable upon the facts.

As Art 17 (iii) does not apply and there is no suggestion that the memorandum of appeal is otherwise specially provided for, I think it follows that the court-fee is payable ad valorem under Sch. I, Art. 1 upon the amount or value of the subject matter in dispute in the appeal. The appellants seek to establish the priority of their debentures. In other words, they seek to exonerate the property which is security for their debentures (to the extent of the value of their debentures) from liability to satisfy the decretal debt. I think the court-fee is payable ad valorem on the decretal debt, or on the value of their debentures, whichever is less.

This conclusion is supported by a decision of this court in Moti Begam v. Har Prasad (6). That was a suit for sale upon a mortgage and one of the defendants Moti Begam, claimed priority for a mortgage executed in her favour to secure her dower debt. The court held that the plaintiff's mortgage was prior in date. Musammam Moti Begam appealed for a declaration that she had a prior charge for the amount of her dower debt and that the property could only be sold subject to her prior charge. The facts are, therefore, similar to those of the present case. The Taxing Judge repelled the contention that the court-fee was payable as in a suit for a mere declaration, and held that it was payable on the amount of the prior charge.

I am also supported by the following decisions of other High Courts. Venkappa v. Narasimha (7), Kesavarapu Ramakrishna Reddi v. Kotta Kota Reddi (8) Jugal Pershad Singh v. Parbhu Narain Jha (9) and Premasukh Das v. Shah Gopi Saran (10).

The Madras Full Bench decision lays down that where the appellant in an appeal against a mortgage-decree does not dispute the amount decreed but disputes the liability of certain properties for the decretal amount, then the court fee is payable on the value of the properties, or on the decretal amount, whichever is less. The other rulings are consistent with this view and I think the same principles are applicable to the present case.

I, therefore, hold that the court-fee is payable ad valorem on the decretal amount or on the value of the debentures, whichever is less.

Where the period of limitation for filing an appeal expired on the 9th December 1931, but the appeal was filed on the 19th December 1931, and s. 5 of the Limitation Act was called in aid on the ground that the appellant had made a mistake in reading the date in the letter sent to him by his Counsel's clerk and the letter itself was not produced:

Held, that under the circumstances of the case the appellant had not made out sufficient cause for the delay in filing the appeal.

Mr. H. Husein, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. C. Mukerji, for Respondent No. 1.

Judgment—This is an application under s. 5 of the Limitation Act. The limitation for the appeal expired on the 9th December 1931, but the appeal was filed in the office on the 19th December and presented in Court for admission on the 21st December. It is said that the appellant's agent had entrusted the papers to a Counsel in Lucknow for an appeal being filed, that the Counsel's clerk wrote to the appellant informing him that the limitation for filing the appeal was to expire on the 9th December 1931, but the appellant made a mistake in reading the date given in the letter. He read it as "19th December 1931" and therefore, the appellant's general agent came to Lucknow on the 19th December with necessary expenses for the filing of the appeal. The contentions in the application are supported by an affidavit of an agent of the appellant. I am not satisfied that the appellant has made out sufficient cause for the delay in filing the appeal. When his agent came to Lucknow and entrusted the papers to a Counsel here he must have found out the last date for the filing of the appeal. It is difficult to believe that he did not, and waited for the Counsel's clerk to inform him of the date later on. The letter alleged to have been sent by the Counsel's clerk has not been produced. The learned Counsel who appears in support of the application on being questioned by me about it says that the letter was not sent by post. Under the circumstances I am unable to believe the story told by the appellant, and must hold that he has failed to make out a sufficient cause for the delay in filing the appeal. The application is therefore dismissed with costs.

The appeal also stands dismissed as time-barred.

The words "the amount due under the decree" in s. 17, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, mean the amount due under the decree at the date it was given and not the amount due under the decree at the date when the application for restoration was presented. *Bisesar Ram Dassi Ram v. Civil Revision against an order of the Small Cause Court Judge Cawnpore, dated 20th December, 1930.

Mr. S. N. Seth, for the Applicant.

Mr. R. C. Ghatak, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—On the 20th January 1930, an ex parte decree was passed in favour of Kallu Mal by a Court of Small Causes for a sum of Rs. 792-2-3 together with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. The decree also allowed Rs. 108 8-0 as costs to the plaintiff. On the 4th of November, 1930, the defendant applied to set aside the ex parte decree under s. 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. His application was accompanied by a deposit and the deposit amounted to a sum of Rs. 934-2-3. The court below considered that the conditions of s. 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act were fulfilled and it accordingly set aside the ex parte decree. It has been contended that the amount deposited in the Court of Small Causes fell short by a small amount and the court had therefore no jurisdiction to set aside the ex parte decree. Our attention has been drawn to a ruling of this court in Bisesar Ram Dassi Ram v. Har Kishan Pahlad Rai (1) in which it has been held by a learned Judge of this court that on a construction of s. 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, the words "the amount due under the decree" mean "the amount due under the decree at the date it was given" and not "the amount due under the decree at the date when the application for restoration was presented." This ruling is of the year 1925. There is no published decision that we know of in which a contrary view has been taken. The ruling in question therefore was an authority for the defendant in depositing in court the amount which was equivalent to the amount which ex facie was due on the decree on the date when the decree was passed. The Small Cause Court Judge in entertaining the application under s. 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act was bound by this ruling. Even assuming that the case referred to above may at some time require consideration we are of opinion that this is a case in which the revisional jurisdiction of this court should not be exercised in favour of the plaintiff under s. 25 of the Act because we think that substantial justice has been done. We accordingly dismiss this application with costs.

Mr. D. P. Khare, for the Accused

Dr. J. N. Misra for District Board, Lucknow.

Judgment—This is a reference under s. 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The dispute in this case relates to certain plots of land measuring 254 sq. ft. at mile No. 13 furlong 7, Lucknow Sultanpur Road. Mr. Sharafat Ullah, First Class Magistrate of Lucknow, directed Sohan Lal, on the complaint of the District Board, Lucknow, to remove a dwelling house from the land in dispute, within a month. Sohan Lal filed an application in revision against the order of the Magistrate in the Court of the Sessions Judge of Lucknow. The learned Judge made this reference to this Court for proper orders. He was of opinion that the learned Magistrate should not have disposed of the case himself in face of the fact that the question of title was involved, as there was 'reliable evidence' in support of Sohan Lal's title, and that the learned Magistrate should have directed the District Board to get their rights established in a competent civil court.

I have read the detailed and careful order of the learned Sessions Judge. I have also heard the learned Counsel on both sides. In my opinion the learned Judge was perfectly right in making this reference to this court. I agree with the learned Judge that the trying Magistrate should not have disposed of the case himself in face of the fact that the question of title was involved and there appeared to be 'reliable evidence' in support of Sohan Lal's title within the meaning of s. 139-A (2) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The reasons which the learned Judge has given in the referring order appear to me to be irrefutable. The learned Magistrate should have stayed the proceedings until the matter of the existence of the right in question was decided by a competent Civil Court. I set aside the order of the learned Magistrate and direct him to proceed according to law. The proceedings should be stayed until the matter of the existence of the right in question has been decided by a competent civil court.

Second Civil Appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Aligarh, dated the 23rd March, 1929

Mr. A. M. Khwaja, for the Appellants.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Respondents.

Judgment—This second appeal has arisen out of a suit brought by the plaintiff respondent for recovery of possession of certain properties, specified at the foot of the plaint. The first court dismissed the suit; but the lower Appellate Court, decreed the plaintiff's claim in full. Some of the defendants have appealed to this court.

The facts of the case are no longer in controversy. The property in dispute belonged to one Chiranji and Musammam Dharman, who executed a deed of simple mortgage in favour of the plaintiff's predecessor-in-interest (hereinafter referred to as plaintiff). The defendants-appellants' predecessor-in-title (hereinafter referred to as defendant) held a simple money-decree against the aforesaid mortgagors and had the mortgage property now in suit attached in execution of their decree shortly before the mortgagee instituted his suit for sale on foot of his mortgage. The sale in execution of the simple money decree in favour of the defendants was not made till after the institution of such suit. The holder of the simple money-decree himself purchased at the auction and obtained possession of the property was now in dispute. Subsequently a decree for sale was passed in favour of the plaintiff. The mortgaged property (the property now in dispute) was sold and purchased by the mortgagee himself, who took out formal delivery of possession but was opposed in the Revenue Court on applying for mutation of names by the defendant, who had purchased it in execution of a simple money decree. Mutation of names was refused to the plaintiff. Accordingly, he brought the suit which has given rise to this appeal for recovery of possession.

The only defence, which it is necessary to mention for the purpose of this appeal, was that the plaintiff is not entitled in any case, to an unconditional decree that the defendant-appellants are entitled to redeem, and that only on their failure to exercise such right of redemption should the plaintiff be given a decree for possession. The learned District Judge overruled this defence. The only question argued in second appeal is that the defendant being an attaching creditor had a right to redeem the mortgage in favour of the plaintiff, that the defendant should have been made a party to the plaintiff's suit on foot of the mortgage and that he, not having been impleaded and afforded an opportunity to exercise his right of redemption, is entitled to redeem now. Subject to the defendant's right of redemption, the plaintiff's right to possession has not been disputed by the learned Counsel for the appellant. The auction sale at which the defendant purchased the property in dispute in execution of his simple money decree took place during the pendency of the plaintiff's suit on foot of his mortgage. Thus the defendant's right, under the auction sale was affected by the rule of lis pendens and was, therefore, subject to the plaintiff's right under the decree for sale. In this view, the plaintiff's right to possession, subject to the defendant's right to redeem, if he has any, cannot be disputed.

The important question for determination is whether the defendant has a right of redemption on the facts already stated. There can be no doubt that, under s. 91 (f), Transfer of Property Act, as it stood before the amendment of 1929, an attaching creditor among others, has a right to redeem the property under attachment. Under O. XXXIV, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code all persons having a right to redeem should be made parties to a suit brought by a mortgagee for sale of the mortgaged property. It follows that the defendant had a right to redeem the mortgage in favour of the plaintiff and that he should have been made a party to the plaintiff's suit on his mortgage.

The next question is whether the defendant, not having been made a party, can now exercise the right of redemption, which he undoubtedly had when the mortgagee's suit was brought. The learned District Judge has held that an attaching creditor, such as the defendant was, has a right to redeem; but such right is extinguished when a sale in pursuance of the attachment takes place. According to this view, the defendant lost his right of redemption when he purchased the property during the pendency of the plaintiff's suit. There can be no doubt that this view makes the attaching creditor's right of redemption in a large number of cases, liable to be defeated with impunity by a mortgagee, because if the attaching creditor is not made a party and the property is allowed to be sold in execution of the simple money decree, the sale itself benig pendente lite can give no right to the auction purchaser against the auction-purchaser in the mortgagee's suit and the right of redemption is ex hypothesi lost in consequence of such auction sale. The logical result of the view taken by the learned District Judge may be as stated as above; but the same view has been taken in a Full Bench case decided by the Madras High Court in Subramania Chettiar v. Sinnammal (1), which merely gives effect to two earlier cases of that court, namely, Veyindramuthu Pillai v. Maya Nadan (2) and Chamiyappa Tharagan v. Ramayyar (3). On the other hand, a contrary view has been taken by this court in Ghulam Husain v. Dina Nath (4) and Ram Prasad v. Bhikari Das (5). Both these cases appear to be on all fours with the present one, though the head-note of the 2nd case is misleading and shows that the sale in execution of the simple money decree had taken place before the institution of the mortgage suit. This, however, is not correct, and as would appear from the body of the judgment such sale was held during the pendency of the mortgage suit. In both of these cases the right of the attaching creditor to redeem the mortgage was deemed subsisting after the sale in execution of the simple money decree and when there was a condict between the auction-purchaser in the mortgage suit and the auction-purchaser in execution of the simple money decree, both claiming the right to possession of the property. It was clearly held that the auction-purchaser in execution of the simple money-decree could redeem. The ratio decidendi adopted in both of them is well stated in Ram Prasad v. Bhikari Das (5) in the following dictum:—

"The respondents (auction-purchasers in the simple money decree) are entitled to redeem. But they are not entitled to anything further by reason of the fact that the plaintiff in that suit omitted to implead them as defendants. The omission to implead them can neither improve their position nor the reverse. The plaintiff-appellant, who purchased the property at a court sale, in a suit in which the mortgagee, Nath Mal, was the plaintiff and the mortgagor was the defendant, purchased the property, that is, whatever rights the mortgagor and mortgagee then possessed, subject to the infirmity that the present respondents had not been impleaded, and consequently he must suffer by reason of the neglect of the plaintiff to implead the respondents. He did not get a clear title to the property, but he got all the title which Nath Mal and the mortgagor could give, and that was a title subject to the equity which the respondents had of redeeming Nath Mal's mortgage and preserving the property for themselves. That right will still be secured to them."

The case of Ghulam Husain v. Dina Nath (4) was followed in Venkataseetharamayya v. Venkataramayya (6), which was disapproved in Parameswara Aiyar v. Land Acquisition Collector, Palghat (7). To that extent there is difference of opinion among the learned Judges of the Madras High Court on this point. We are bound to follow the rulings of this Court which were not referred to before the learned District Judge, otherwise we have no doubt his decision would have been different.

The result is that the plaintiff-respondent is entitled to possession of the property in dispute as against the defendant-appellants. This right, however, is so far qualified that the defendants are entitled to be placed in the position they would have been in if they had been impleaded by the plaintiff in the mortgage suit that is, they would have had a right to redeem within the period of six months fixed by the preliminary decree. The proper order in this case, therefore, is that the defendants should be given the opportunity to redeem the mortgage within six months from the date on which the court of first instance will declare the amount due to the plaintiff on his mortgage, which the defendants must pay if they desire to redeem; and if they fail to redeem within such time the plaintiff shall be entitled to recover possession of the property in dispute. If they redeem within that period, the plaintiff's suit shall stand dismissed. Accordingly, we allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and also that of the court of first instance, which dismissed the plaintiff's suit in toto, and pass a decree in favour of the plaintiff-respondent in the above terms. Our decree should be considered to be a preliminary decree. We remand the case to the court of first instance to ascertain and declare the amount payable by the defendants for redemption of the mortgage in question and to pass a final decree dismissing or decreeing the plaintiff's suit according as the defendants redeem or fail to redeem by payment of the amount declared by the court within the period of six months, as already stated. The costs here and hitherto incurred by the parties shall abide the result to be embodied in the final decree which the court of first instance will eventually pass.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 202, 204, 439—Order calling for charge-sheet, effect of—Enquiry under s. 202—Power to arrest without warrant, if affected—Quashing of criminal proceedings—Power of High Court.

An order calling for a charge-sheet on a report under s. 202, Criminal Procedure Code, when the Police drew-up a First Information Report is an order under s. 204, Criminal Procedure Code, and in practice an order for issue of process. Isaf Nasya v. Emperor (1), Emperor v. Haji Nur Muhammad (2) and Ulfat Khan v. Emperor (4), referred to. Rampabittar Singh v. Kasim Ali Khan (3), dissented from. [p. 847, col. 2.]

If an enquiry under s. 202 is held by a Magistrate or a Police Officer his power to arrest without a warrant remains intact. King-Emperor v. Bhola Bhagat (5), relied on. [p. 848, col. 1.]

Ordinarily if a Magistrate has ordered an accused person to be tried, the trial must proceed. But when the High Court is satisfied that an accused is being prosecuted without there being any material before the Magistrate for his prosecution, it will interfere to set aside the order calling for a prompt redress.

[Significance and nature of charge-sheet discussed.]

Application against an order of the Session Judge, Gaya, dated the 8th June, 1931, dismissing an application against the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Nawadah, dated the 3rd May, 1931.

Sir Ali Imam, Messrs. Manohar Lall, N. K. Prasad II and Chowdhury M. Prasad, for the Petitioner.

Sir Sultan Ahmad, Government-Advocate, for the Crown.

Judgment—These cases along with Criminal Revisions Nos. 331 and 332 and Criminal Miscellaneous Case No. 36 of 1931 arise out of a dispute which has cropped up about the succession and possession of certain Math called Mudra situated within the Gobindpur Police Station of the Nawadah Sub-Division in the District of Gaya and the properties appertaining to it lying in Gaya and Monghyr. The admitted Mahanth of the Math was one Tokhnarain Puri who died on the 12th of August, 1930. The rival claimants to the gaddi are Premnarain Puri on the one hand and Raghunath Puri on the other.

The case of Premnarain Puri is that on the death of Tokhnarain Puri he was formally installed as a Mahanth of the Mudra Math, which has also a branch at Dhondha, with the full approval and help of the Mahanth of Budhauri Ramdhan Puri. Sometime in March, 1931, he fell ill and went for treatment to Gaya. During his absence Raghunath Puri, who was only his servant, surreptitiously obtained possession of the key of the treasury and proclaimed himself Mahanth of the Math and, since then, has been adopting various illegal methods to dispossess him (Premnarain Puri) from the Mahant ship of the Math and the properties appertaining to it which are admittedly very valuable and are said to consist besides moveables landed properties yielding an income of Rs. 60 000 per annum. The case of Raghunath Puri on the other hand is that he is the real Mahanth who succeeded Tokhnarain Puri and that Premnarain Puri was his servant who fraudulently got his name entered in the Collectorate register and has been posing himself as a Mahanth. In short each of the two rival claimants asserts himself to be the real Mahanth and calls his adversary a disloyal and dishonest servant who has raised standard of revolt against his master. Each claims to have obtained peaceful possession of the properties and charges the other with attempts to dispossess him.

The litigation started with a petition sent by Premnarain sometime about the 8th of March, 1931, to the Superintendent of Police, Gaya, who deputed some constables to the Mudra Math, and a Police enquiry held in consequence of this petition led to the institution at Nawadah of a case under s. 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure against Raghunath Puri and others in which Mahanth Ramdhan Puri and his manager Dhaneshwar Prasad have also been implicated as being real persons at the bottom of the trouble and as helpers and abettors of Raghunath Puri. It is said by the Police that when Premnarain Puri was installed as a Mahanth he promised to make over the cash of the treasury to Ramdhan Puri. Premnarain backed out of his promise and, therefore, Mahanth Ramdhan Puri has become his enemy and has set up Raghunath Puri as a rival claimant to the gaddi of Mudra Math and has been helping in dispossessing Premnarain Puri. The case under s. 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure pending before the Sub-Divisional Officer of Nawadah is the subject-matter of Criminal Revisions Nos. 331 and 332 of 1931. In the meantime some associates and partisans of Raghunath Puri are alleged to have committed criminal trespass into a house at Nawadah appertaining to the Mudra Math. They have been prosecuted under s. 455 of the Indian Penal Code and this case is also pending before the Sub-Divisional Officer of Nawadah and an application to this court for its transfer from the district is the subject-matter of Criminal Miscellaneous Case No. 36 of 1931. There was another case under s. 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in respect of a village called Sukho Deora appertaining to the same Math. One Maulvi Malik Mokhtar Ahmad claimed to have taken a lease of this village from Premnarain Puri and alleged disturbance by Raghunath Puri. The Sub-Divisional Officer of Nawadah by an order passed under s. 144, Criminal Procedure Code (which was made absolute on the 27th of May, 1931,) directed the men of Raghunath Puri to vacate the kutchery of the village. Since then proceedings under s. 107 Criminal Procedure Code have been started against the parties. I now come to the facts of the present case.

On the 14th of March, 1931, one Ramdeo Singh, a servant of Premnarain Puri, filed a petition of complaint before the Sub Divisional Officer of Nawadah and, on this complaint and on the report of the Police on that complaint the petitioners Raghunath Puri and others (including Ramdhan Puri and his manager Dhaneshwar Prasad) have been placed upon their trial. In these cases this court is asked to quash the proceedings of the prosecution. It is necessary that I should deal with the facts of this complaint and the various steps taken by the learned Sub Divisional Officer rather in detail. The petition of complaint is in Hindi. It is against five persons only, namely, Raghunath Puri, Ramdhari Singh, Baijnath Puri, Rajkumar Singh and Shankar Kahar, inhabitants of Mauza Mudra, Thana Gobindpur. The date of the occurrence is mentioned as the 14th of March, 1931, the very date on which the petition was filed. It said that the complainant was a servant of Premnarin Puri who being indisposed had gone to Gaya, for treatment. In his absence the accused were causing undue interference in the Mudra math for which proceedings had separately been taken. Then it said that the complainant went to Mudra under the orders of his master. Seeing him, Raghunath Puri became very much annoyed and directed his servants to shoot him, on which the other accused persons chased the complainant. The complainant thereupon went to the Police who were deputed there but they did not give him any help. The accused persons threatened the complainant. There is not one word in this petition which refers to any criminal offence having been committed by anybody except the five persons named in it and that also on the 14th of March when there was a criminal intimidation and assault by chasing the complainant. There is nothing in this petition about criminal trespass or conspiracy. The names of Mahanth Ramdhan Puri and his manager Dhaneshwar Prasad are not even suggested. However the Sub Divisional Officer examined the complainant on oath and in this examination the following are the only passages suggesting the commission of any criminal offence:

(1) "During his (Premnarin Puri's) absence Raghunath Puri entered into a conspiracy with the tenants and made preparations to dispossess Premnarin Puri.

(2) Raghunath Puri and others occupied the math at Mudra by force during the absence of Premnarin Puri.

(3) He (Raghunath Puri) and his colleagues are now changing the rent receipts granted to tenants by Mahanth Premnarin.

(4) They (presumably referring to Raghunath Puri and his colleagues not named) have also removed certain articles from the math. They have broke open one room by forcing the lock.

(5) They (perhaps again referring to Raghunath Puri and his men) have taken the key of the treasury in their possession.

(6) The story of intimidation and chase mentioned in the written complaint.

The learned Sub-Divisional Officer referred the complaint to the Police for investigation. The Police treated the complaint as a first information, filled up the required forms, and investigated the case presumably under Chap. XIV of the Code of Criminal Procedure and submitted a report in the prescribed form declaring the case to be false. The Police found that what really happened was that the complainant with a few companions of his went on a taxicab to Mudra and wanted to enter the math. The gate-keepers did not allow them to enter and there was some altercation. The complainant magnified this into an occurrence. The Police further stated that as the two parties Premnarin and Raghunath were fighting over the possession of the math, cases of this nature were likely to happen often. It is to be noted that the officer in charge of the Police Station investigated the case under the supervision of the Divisional Inspector and the Deputy Superintendent of Police and the final report was submitted under the orders of the Superintendent of Police. In the meantime on the 31st of March the complainant had filed a petition expressing his suspicion against the Police because the accused were helped by the Mahanth of Budhauri, and the latter and his men were fabricating false documents and changing receipts of the tenants. This was for the first time that the name of the Mahanth of Budhauri came in the proceedings. When the Police report came the learned Magistrate was not satisfied with it and on the 10th of April, 1931 wrote a note on the report and ordered a fresh enquiry. It will be desirable to mention that the Police confined their investigation to the occurrence alleged to have taken place on the 14th of March 1931. They were apparently not wrong. First of all the petition of complaint, as I have already stated, made absolutely no mention of any criminal offence having been committed by anybody prior to the date of occurrence (14th March, 1931). Secondly even in the statement on oath of the complainant the basis of the complaint is the occurrence of the 14th of March. The series of incidents mentioned do not appear to be the basis of the complaint, because it was too indefinite and except Raghunath Puri nobody was mentioned in connection with them. Facts were not mentioned to enable the Magistrate to take steps on them. The complaint is defined in s. 4 (h) of the Criminal Procedure Code. "Complaint" means the allegation made orally or in writing to a Magistrate with a view to his taking action under this Code that some persons whether known or unknown have committed an offence etc etc. The written petition filed made absolutely no mention of anything else than the occurrence of the 14th of March and it is very difficult to construe the statements on oath as if they were made with a view to the Magistrate's taking action on them. The learned Sessions Judge when he was asked to refer the matter to this court for the quashing of proceedings was of opinion that the allegation of other incidents besides that of the occurrence of the 14th of March was not a complaint and I agree with him. On reading the complaint and even the statement on oath, the Police Sub Inspector, whose investigation was supervised by the Inspector of Police and the Deputy Superintendent of Police, was not wrong in concluding that the complaint referred to the incident of the 14th of March only. I have said that the learned Magistrate wrote a note on the final report of the Police. This note requires rather a detailed examination as its language and observations have been subjected to a severe attack by Sir Ali Imam who has appeared on behalf of two of the petitioners.

The learned Magistrate remarked:

"that the investigation was not properly made, that it was a matter of common knowledge of everyone who was in touch with the administration of criminal justice in this country that complaints were usually exaggerated before they reached the Police or the court."

He then analysed the complaint into the following elements: (1) that Premnarin Puri is the Mahant of Mudra; (2) that Raghunath Puri his manager committed the theft of key of the Mudra treasury; (3) that Raghunath Puri and others conspired to oust Premnarin from his possession over the Mudra math and its properties; (4) that Raghunath Puri occupied the math at Mudra and declared himself to be the Mahant; (5) that he committed the offence of house trespass after having made preparations to cause hurt; that he and others made preparations to obstruct the lawful entry of Mahant Premnarin in the math and (6) that on a certain date Ramdeo Singh, who entered the math on behalf of Premnarin Puri, was intimidated and chased away. He then found fault with the Police for their having confined themselves to No. 6 only and not arriving at any finding on the other points. He then said:—

"The enquiry should be completed as early as possible and report should be submitted to me within a week. The atmosphere is surcharged with dangerous possibilities and still the Police are taking months in the submission of their report."

This criticism of the Police was in my opinion unjustified. The investigation was ordered on the 14th of March and the Police report which is dated the 2nd April, 1931, was submitted to the Sub-Divisional Officer by the Inspector on the 6th of April. In my opinion the investigation, which was supervised by the Divisional Inspector and the Deputy Superintendent of Police, did not take such an unusually long time as the learned Magistrate seems to think. The Magistrate further said:—

"I am sending a copy of my remarks to the Superintendent of Police and the District Magistrate for information. I would also request the Superintendent of Police to supervise the case personally if he can find time to do so. The matter is indeed very serious, the property involved being worth lakhs and lakhs. It would be a fit case in which the highest Police Officer in the district may watch the proceedings himself."

Sir Ali Imam contends that in this note there are matters which were neither in the written complaint nor in the statement on oath nor in the Police report, and that the Magistrate introduced facts from his extra judicial knowledge and that by unduly criticising the Police and showing some warmth in the language, the learned Magistrate practically hinted what the Police was to do in the matter.

There is no doubt that this note contains matters which are not to be found in the records of the present case. The learned Magistrate had before him the written complaint of Ramdeo Singh, his statement on oath, his petition of protest and the Police report declaring the incident of the 14th of March to be false. The learned Magistrate analysed the "complaint filed". If he meant by the 'complaint filed' the written complaint, then it contained nothing except the incident of the 14th of March, 1931. But if he meant the statement on oath, even then there are certain matters in the note which are not to be found in that statement; and in my opinion the learned Magistrate could with advantage have avoided the little warmth which he has shown in his note and which has created apprehension in the mind of the accused. At the same time in fairness to the learned Magistrate I must say that he did not introduce any extra-judicial information. It will be recalled that when Premnarain Puri sent a petition to the Superintendent of Police, an enquiry was held and a report under s. 107, Criminal Procedure Code was submitted. That case was pending before the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate and the facts contained in his note of the 10th seem to have been taken some from the report, some from the arguments in that case which was partly heard and discussed on the 25th of March 1931 and some from another criminal case which was being heard. In my opinion the learned Magistrate somewhat confused the facts which came to his knowledge in s. 107 case and in another criminal case with the facts of the present complaint and much cannot be made of this.

Though the learned Magistrate ordered a further enquiry (as he says) into the complaint, in fact he ordered inquiries about incidents which though not the basis of the complaint were mentioned by the complainant leading to the occurrence of the 14th of March, 1931. The Police made further investigation and submitted a supplementary report on which the learned Magistrate on the 14th of May ordered the submission of charge-sheets against Raghunath Puri, Ramdhari Singh, Baijnath Puri, Rajkumar Singh and Shankar Kahar under s. 452, Indian Penal Code and under s. 452—114 against Dhaneshwar Prasad. Later on he ordered submission of charge-sheet against Mahanth Ramdhan Puri of Budhaulti also under s. 452—109, Indian Penal Code. In these cases this court is asked to set aside this order of calling of charge sheets and to quash the entire proceedings. Applications to the Sessions Judge to refer the case to this court were refused.

It is contended that as there was a complaint the learned Magistrate had no power to order the submission of charge-sheet and ought to have disposed of it under s. 203 and s. 204 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Reliance has been placed upon the cases of Isaf Nasya v. Emperor (1), Emperor v. Haji Nur Muhammad (2) and the observations of Jwala Prasad, J. in the cases of 67 Ind. Cas. 499 Rampabittar Singh v. Kasim Ali Khan (3) and 108 Ind. Cas. 333 Ulfat Khan v. Emperor (4). In my opinion except for the observation in Rampabittar's case (4) none of the cases is an authority to show that the Magistrate in the case was not empowered to order a charge-sheet.

First of all there is no provision for a charge sheet in the Criminal Procedure Code. Charge-sheet is a form provided under Departmental rules of the Government presumably under s. 173 (1) (a) of the Criminal Procedure Code. That section requires the Police to submit to a Magistrate empowered to take cognizance of an offence on a Police report—meaning a Magistrate empowered under s. 190 (b)—a report in the form prescribed by the Local Government. The Government have, as it appears, prescribed two forms. One is called charge-sheet to be used when the accused is sent up for trial and the other is called "Final report" which is used when the accused is not sent up for trial. When such a report is received by the Magistrate empowered under s. 190 (b) he takes cognizance of the offence under that section. Even if the accused is not sent up i. e., not a charge-sheet but a final report is sent, the Magistrate when he applies his mind to that report takes cognizance of the offence and if he wants to place the accused on trial he can issue his process. This he can only do under s. 204 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Section 204 does not apply only when cognizance is taken on a complaint but also when cognizance is taken on a Police report. This is the first section of Chap. XVII, headed "Of the commencement of proceedings before Magistrates." A Magistrate empowered under s. 190 (a) and (b) can issue his process for compelling the appearance of the accused on the perusal of the Police report submitted to him under s. 173, Criminal Procedure Code declaring the case to be false. He can also do the same on perusal of Police report submitted to him after an enquiry under s. 202 on case of a complaint. In both the cases he will be acting under s. 204, the only section authorising the Magistrate in any case to proceed against the accused. In one case, if the report is under s. 173, he will be disposing of that report; and in the other case if there is a complaint he will be disposing of the complaint.

Now an order for submission of a charge-sheet may be an executive order or a judicial order. In the former category is the order which is sometimes passed by superior Police Officers and sometimes by Magistrates to their subordinates engaged in the investigation and before the final report is submitted under s. 173. It is an executive direction of an Officer to his subordinate whether or not the accused should be sent up for trial. If the order is for submission of a charge-sheet it only means that superior officers direct the subordinate Police Officers to send the case for trial.

In the second category is the order which is passed by the Magistrate empowered under s. 190 (b) when disposing of a Police report under s. 173, Criminal Procedure Code. In my opinion it is an order under s. 204, Criminal Procedure Code. It is nothing but a short way of saying:

"I give you warrant to arrest the accused, send them up either in custody or on bail according to the nature of the offence."

It is a mode of issuing process for compelling the attendance of the accused which has come into practical use.

In this case there was a complaint sent to the Police for enquiry under s. 202. The Police had drawn up a First Information on that complaint and submitted a report in the prescribed form. It is immaterial whether we hold this to be a report under s. 202 or s. 173, Criminal Procedure Code. The Magistrate who had taken cognizance of the complaint was also empowered to take cognizance under s. 190 (b). He was empowered to order further enquiry. When the supplementary report came he had again full power to act under s. 204, no matter whether the report was under s. 202 or s. 173. The order for a charge-sheet was practically a warrant under s. 204. If there was any technical irregularity it was rectified by the issue of warrants against the accused on the 9th of June, 1931. In the Calcutta case referred to above the District Magistrate took cognizance of the case on a complaint and ordered the Police to send up a charge-sheet to another Magistrate (Sub-Divisional Magistrate) if the case was found to be proved. The Police found the case proved and submitted the charge-sheet to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Nilphamari. The result was that the complaint before the District Magistrate remained undisposed of, and the District Magistrate who was under the law bound to dispose of either under s. 203 or s. 204 was deprived of the opportunity to do so. The High Court directed the District Magistrate to dispose of the complaint according to law. Similar were the circumstances in the Bombay case. There also the Police of their own accord submitted a charge sheet which was placed before a Magistrate other than the one who had taken cognizance of the offence on a complaint and the former held that the accused were not properly before him and discharged them. This order was upheld by the High Court. In these two cases the Police submitted a charge-sheet on their own accord without having been directed to do so by the Magistrate before whom the complaint was pending. In the present case it has been ordered by the Magistrate before whom the complaint was made and who had ordered the enquiry. The observation of Jwala Prasad, J., in Rampabitar Singh v. Kasim Ali Khan (4) looks rather supporting the view urged by the learned Advocate for the petitioners (Mr. Manohar Lal) that the Magistrate had no power to order a charge-sheet. But a careful reading of the judgment will show that his Lordship's decision was not so much based upon the powers of the Magistrate to order a charge-sheet as upon the facts and circumstances of that case. There, after an enquiry the Police reported the case to be false. The Magistrate ordered a charge-sheet. Then his Lordship observed that the basis of the Magistrate's order was the Police report which did not justify him in calling for a charge-sheet. No doubt his Lordship observed that no order for submitting a charge-sheet could be made by the Magistrate. The Magistrate could only pass an order under s. 203 or s. 204 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and, therefore, the order of the Magistrate was ultra vires. It is respectfully submitted that an order calling for a charge-sheet on a report under s. 202 when the Police drew up a First Information Report is an order under s. 204, Criminal Procedure Code and in practice is an order for issue of process. If the Magistrate on a perusal of the Police report submitted under s. 202, Criminal Procedure Code, orders the issue of a warrant of arrest for the production of the accused I fail to understand why he cannot achieve the same object by ordering the Police to send up the accused for trial. Then this judgment of Jwala Prasad, J., was prior to the Amendment of the Criminal Procedure Code. The new s. 190 (b) has been so amended as to authorize a Magistrate to take cognizance of offence on any Police report. Report of the Police after an enquiry under s. 202 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is after all a Police report and comes within s. 190 (b). If the Magistrate is applying his mind to a report submitted by the Police after an enquiry under s. 202, I think he is at one and the same time applying his mind to the facts of the complaint as well as to the facts disclosed in the report. Then again I see absolutely no reason why the Police when they got the complaint could not treat the complaint as information and act upon it independently of the Magisterial orders. A written complaint signed by the complainant supported by a statement on oath made before a Magistrate is before the Police. Why can they not treat it as a First Information of a cognizable offence? Supposing for instance a Magistrate receives a complaint of an offence of murder. He sends it to the Police for investigation. Can it be said that if the Police are satisfied that a man has committed murder they are not entitled to arrest him or to send him to the Magistrate? Section 202 (2) says:

"If an enquiry or investigation under this section is made by a person not being a Magistrate or a Police Officer, such person shall exercise all the powers conferred by this Code on an Officer in charge of a Police Station, except that he shall not have power to arrest without warrant."

This clearly indicates that if the enquiry is held by a Magistrate or a Police Officer his power to arrest without a warrant remains intact. I respectfully agree with the view expressed by Mullick, J., in the case of Emperor v. Bhola Bhagat (5). In my opinion because a complaint has been sent to a Police Officer to investigate a case it does not deprive the Police of their rights to investigate a cognizable offence independent of the complaint. Nor do I think that if a Magistrate has taken cognizance of an offence on a complaint he is deprived of his power of taking cognizance of connected offences on a Police report. The only thing which the law requires is a final disposal of the complaint lodged before a Magistrate; and this has been done in this case. As the learned Magistrate was empowered to take cognizance both on a complaint and on a Police report and the complaint was pending before him, I am not prepared to set aside his order on this ground. It is not necessary that the Magistrate should always record under what provisions of law he was proceeding.

Now I take up the question whether the learned Magistrate had any material for the issue of a process. Ordinarily if the Magistrate has ordered an accused to be tried, the trial must proceed. But when this court is satisfied that an accused is being prosecuted without there being any material before the Magistrate for his prosecution, it will be abdicating its function if it did not interfere to stop patent injustice calling for a prompt redress, see Jagat Chandra Mazumdar v. Queen-Empress (6). I wish to examine the case of each of the petitioners separately.

BUDHAULI.

I will confine myself to the materials which were legally before the Magistrate. They were five in number, (1) the written complaint of Ramdeo Singh; (2) his statement on oath before the Magistrate; (3) the petition of protest by the complainant; (4) the first Police report and (5) the supplementary Police report. In the first three there is absolutely no mention of Mahanth Ramdhan Puri, not even an insinuation against him. In the fourth the only allegation against him is that he is a helper of Raghunath Puri and he and his men are trying to change the receipts. It discloses an offence of fabricating false evidence. This statement was not supported by oath and at any rate has no connection with abetment of house trespass and the material placed before the court is so meagre and so indefinite that no action can be taken upon it. Then last is the supplementary Police report. In this the accusations against the Mahanth of Budhauili are the following :

(1) that at his suggestion the manager Raghunath Puri was sent to Gaya from the Mudra Math through the accused Ramdhari Singh. Premnarain Puri made over to him the key of his cash box and made over to him the charge of domestic affairs etc.;

(2) It was decided at the instance of the Budhauili Mahanth to take Premnarain Puri to succeed him (Tokhnarain Puri). This being done the Budhauili Mahanth wanted certain concession from Premnarain Puri, one of which was that the treasure left behind by Mahanth Tokhnarain Puri should be made over to him etc., etc., etc. After Premnarain Puri went back on his promise to deliver the treasure of Budhauili Mahanth, ill-feeling arose between them but the latter did not give vent to his feeling and continued to be on friendly terms with the former although he cherished hatred for him and had been apparently on the look out to avenge himself upon him as best as he could. This hardly discloses commission of any offence. However objectionable the conduct of the Mahanth of Budhauri might have been—an attempt to make profit in the bargain and to get angry and vindictive when that attempt fails may be bad—but we are not moral preceptors. It is possible that this ill-feeling might have induced the Mahanth of Budhauri to give his help to Raghunath Puri, but every help to Raghunath Puri is not necessarily an offence;

(3) That a case under s. 452, Indian Penal Code was instituted against Premnarain Puri by one Paro Dhanuk of Budhauri, a domestic servant of the Mahanth of Budhauri. The case was found to be false. There seems to be an insinuation though not an assertion that the Mahanth of Budhauri was an abettor in the institution of this false case.

These can hardly be sufficient to place him upon his trial for abetment of an offence of house trespass in the Math at Mudra. The learned Sessions Judge in his order refusing a reference to this case has said that there are insinuations against the Mahanth of Budhauri. In my opinion no man should be placed upon his trial unless there is a definite assertion of facts against him which if believed, may lead to conviction. Even if every word said against Ramdhan Puri is true, it will be impossible to convict him of abetment of house trespass.

DHANESHWAR PRASAD.

The only allegation against him is that he was present when Raghunath Puri took chaddar (a ceremony of assumption of Mahantship). First of all a ceremony of assumption of Mahantship by itself is not an offence. Then it is not clear where it was performed. Raghunath Puri was living in the Math and in the petition of complaint he is described as a resident of Mudra. If one day he declared himself as the Mahanth or a rival of his master and Dhaneshwar was present at the occasion or even helped him in doing so, I do not think this can be said to constitute an offence under s. 452—114, Indian Penal Code. It is to be noticed that the Police suggested the prosecution of Ramdhan Puri and Dhaneshwar Prasad under s. 120 B, Indian Penal Code and they did not mention a word about their having abetted the offence of criminal trespass. The learned Magistrate was also for some time of the same view. The various conflicting orders which I find on pages 1 and 2 of the supplementary report at the end of it changed one after the other show the difficulties the learned Magistrate felt in ordering the prosecution of these two men and in my opinion his earlier doubts were well-founded.

RAMDHARI SINGH, BAIJNATH PURI, RAJKUMAR SINGH and SHANKAR KAHAR.

Excepting in the petition of complaint and in the statement on oath I do not find their names mentioned anywhere in connection with any offence. In these they have been accused for the alleged occurrence of the 14th of March 1931 which was found by the Police to be false a finding which seems to have been accepted by the Magistrate. I fail to understand on what materials he has proceeded against them under s. 452, Indian Penal Code

RAGHUNATH PURI.

There are allegations against him in the complaint, in the statement on oath and in the supplementary Police report which disclose the commission of some offence of house trespass by him. In my opinion his prosecution should stand. Mr. Manohar Lal contends that trespass, if any, was of a civil nature. This is, however, a matter for trial. The prosecution of Ramdhan Puri, Dhaneshwar Prasad, Ramdhari Singh Baijnath Puri, Rajkumar Singh and Shankar Kahar must be set aside. While I have ordered this I entirely appreciate the point of view of the learned Magistrate. Perhaps he felt what may be called a righteous indignation at the alleged conduct of Raghunath Puri possibly helped by the Mahanth of Budhauri. The circumstances before him showed prima facie that the former was in the wrong and there were insinuations also against the latter. We are, however, bound by law, and the circumstances may be capable of explanations. We have to administer the law as it stands and not as we like it to be. The Legislature in their wisdom have provided procedure by which alone a man can be placed upon his trial. First of all a Magistrate must take cognizance of an offence and that he can do only in one of three ways, viz., (1) on a complaint, (2) on a Police report or (3) on his own information. Therefore there must be some material before the Magistrate showing that the accused has committed the offence. These precautions have been provided by the Legislature in order to save persons from useless prosecution. No doubt in spite of them cases have occurred in which innocent persons have been convicted. On the other hand there are cases in which by the observance of procedure guilty ones escaped punishment but in spite of this we must administer the law as it stands. Cases are not rare in which we find our private feelings in sympathy with the accused but we have to convict and punish him. On the other hand we feel indignant at the conduct of certain accused but have to let him off. In this case it is my considered opinion that the learned Magistrate had nothing else in view but the maintenance of law and order in his subdivision. He, however, ordered the prosecution of some men without there being any material before him and I feel it my duty to intervene.

Criminal Revision No. 275 is partly allowed and I direct the order of the Magistrate calling for charge sheets against Ramdhari Singh, Baijnath Puri, Rajkumar Singh and Shankar Kahar be set aside and they will be discharged from their bail. Raghunath Puri will be tried, but taking into consideration the various orders passed by the Magistrate not in this case but also in connected cases and which I shall deal in Criminal Miscellaneous Case No. 36 of 1931 and without any reflection upon the learned Magistrate I think that in the ends of justice he should be tried by some other Magistrate. I transfer the case to the file of the District Magistrate of Gaya who will either try it himself or make it over to such other Magistrate competent to try the case as he thinks fit. Raghunath will remain on bail as already ordered by this court, pending his trial. If required he will give fresh bail to the satisfaction of the District Magistrate.

Criminal Revision No. 276 of 1931 is allowed and the order of the submission of charge-sheets under s. 452-114, Indian Penal Code against Ramdhan Puri, Dhaneshwar Prasad is set aside and they are discharged from their bail. This will not prevent their prosecution for any other offence in connection with dispute for which material may properly be placed before a competent Magistrate.

A.

GUDAPARTI SEETHAMMA AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 152—Suit for sale on mortgage—Preliminary decree—Wrong survey number entered in mortgage-deed, plaint and decree—Mistake common to both parties—Suit for rectification of decree—Maintainability of—Proper procedure—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 31.

A preliminary decree was passed in a suit for sale on a mortgage. Subsequently the mortgagee found out that by a mistake a wrong survey number had been entered in the mortgage-deed and the mistake was repeated in the plaint as also in the preliminary decree. The mortgagee sued for rectification of the deed of mortgage and also of the plaint and the preliminary decree in respect of the mistaken survey number. It appeared that as a matter of fact there had been a common mistake on the point by both parties:

Held, (i) that to attack by a 2nd suit the decree in a previous suit between the same parties would offend against the principle of res judicata which admits of exception only in cases where the previous decree was a compromise decree or a decree obtained by fraud of the other party and that consequently rectification of the mortgage-deed could not be granted. Venkatarama Aiyar v. Elumalai Naicker (2), explained. Kushadha Bhukta v. Braja Mohan Bhukta (4) and Mahendra Narain v. Lal Jhari Kuer (8), relied on. Bepin Krishna Ray v. Jogeshwar Ray (1) and Kailas v. Bijoy (3), not followed. Ganesh Row v. Tuljaram Rao (10) and Partap Singh v. Bhabuti Singh (11), referred to. [p. 852, col. 1.]

(ii) that in proper cases the Court could grant rectification of a mortgage-deed which has ripened into a decree and that the limits after which rectification of an instrument should not be made are (a) the limit stated in s. 31, Specific Relief Act, when 3rd parties have acquired rights in good faith and for value and (b) where a decree has been obtained on an unrectified instrument and that decree has been executed and money or property concerned has been recovered. Caird v. Moss (13) and Marriot v. Hampton (14), referred to. [p. 853, col. 2.]

(iii) that after getting their mortgage-deed rectified and then amending their plaint the decree-holder then could apply for review or amendment of the preliminary decree under s. 152, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 854, col. 2.]

Per Ananthakrishna Ayyar, J.—The circumstance that a decree has been passed on a mortgage is not by itself a legal bar to such rectification being granted when otherwise a case for rectification is made out. Bepin Krishna Ray v. Jogeshwar Ray (1), relied on. [p. 855, col. 2.]

Letters Patent Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Waller, in S. A. No. 473 of 1925, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Amalapur, in A. S. No. 16 of 1924 (A. S. No. 24 of 1924 of the Sub-Court, Rajahmundry—A. S. No. 249 of 1923 of the District Court. Godawari) preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Razole, in O. S. No. 411 of 1921.

Mr. K. Bhimasankaran, for Mr. B. Satyanarayana, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kasturi Seshagiri Rao for Mr. B. Somayya, for the Respondents.

Relly, J.—In 1906 the brother of defendant No. 1 mortgaged some land to the mother of the three plaintiffs. After their mother's death the plaintiffs in 1919 brought a suit for sale on that mortgage, O. S. No. 302 of 1919 on the file of the District Munsif of Razole, and got a preliminary decree. There was no appeal against that decree. Not long after that decree had been made the plaintiffs discovered that in the mortgage deed Survey No 166 had been entered by mistake for Survey No. 168, and that that mistake had been repeated in their plaint and in the decree which they had obtained. They then brought the present suit, praying for rectification of the mortgage-deed by the substitution of Survey No. 168 for Survey No. 166 and for a similar rectification of the decree in O. S. No. 302 of 1919. It was found both by the District Munsif and by the Subordinate Judge on appeal in the present suit that there had been a common mistake by the parties to the mortgage-deed and that in consequence of that mistake Survey No. 166 had been entered in the deed when the parties intended to deal with Survey No. 168. That finding of fact in regard to the common mistake made is binding upon us. The District Munsif ordered rectification, as prayed by the plaintiffs, both of the mortgaged-deed and of the preliminary decree, and that decision was confirmed by the Subordinate Judge on appeal. Defendant No. 1 preferred a second appeal to this Court which was dismissed by Waller, J. The present appeal is again by defendant No. 1, against Waller, J's decision.

Waller, J., in a brief judgment remarks that it has been contended before him that though the mortgage-deed might be rectified, the decree made upon it could not be rectified in the suit. That contention he overruled on the strength of 66 Ind. Cas. 345 Bepin Krishna Ray v. Jogeshwar Ray (1), and Venkata rama Aiyar v. Elumalai Naicker (2). We have examined the records in Venkata rama Aiyar v. Elumalai Naicker (2), so far as they are available, and that case does not appear to be capable of the interpretation which Waller, J., put upon it. It is not clear from the records available whether the decree in the first suit was ever rectified in the second suit; but it is quite clear from the judgment of Schwabe, O. J., in the second appeal that he found no rectification even of the deed to be necessary as the land was in his opinion sufficiently identified by the description originally given in the deed and in the decree in the first suit. Nor was there any discussion in his judgment, with which Wallace, J., agreed, of the question whether the decree in the first suit could have been rectified in a second suit. But 66 Ind. Cas. 345 Bepin Krishna Ray v. Jogeshwar Ray (1), is a clear authority, if it is to be followed, in support of Waller, J's judgment. That was a decision of Mookerjee and Buckland, JJ. of the Calcutta High Court. There in the second suit the mortgage deed and the decree obtained upon that mortgage-deed in a previous suit had been rectified. It was found that there had been a common mistake in making the mortgage-deed, and the decision was that the deed and the decree obtained upon it might both be rectified in the second suit, provided that would not infringe the rights of any third party acquired in good faith and for value, as the learned Judges found that it would not. That decision was followed a short time afterwards by Mookerjee, J., himself and Cumming, J. in Kailas v. Bijay (3), but without any further discussion. It is in conflict with an earlier decision of Jenkins, O. J., and Holmwood, J., in Kushodhaj Bhukta v. Braja Mohan Bhukta (4), and in conflict with another earlier decision of a different Bench of the Calcutta High Court in 14 Ind. Cas. 93 Bhonda Singh v. Dowlat Ray (5). In the previous suit which led to Kushodhaj Bhukta v. Braja Mohan Bhukta (4) the plaintiff had claimed an one-third share of certain property, and the Judge in his judgment had found that he was entitled to that share. But in the decree by some accident a half-share was provided as the share which the plaintiff was entitled to recover. In the second suit, which came before the High Court as Kushodhaj Bhukta v. Braja Mohan Bhukta (4), one of the defendants in the previous suit sued to set aside the decree in the previous suit on the ground of mistake. Jenkins, O. J., and Holmwood, J., found that such a suit, to set aside the decree in the previous suit on the ground of mistake, was unsustainable. They referred to a previous decision of the Calcutta High Court, Jogeshwar Atha v. Ganga Bishnu (6), in which it had been held that such a suit to set aside a previous decree was possible; but Jenkins, O. J., pointed out that that decision was based on a misapprehension of the law in England as disclosed by a case which had been cited namely, Ainsworth v. Wilding (7). In 66 Ind. Cas. 345 Bepin Krishna Ray v. Jogeshwar Ray (1), the decision in Jogeshwar Atha v. Ganga Bishnu (6), was followed; but the reason Jenkins, O. J., had pointed out why that case should not be regarded as a sound precedent does not appear to have been observed. With great respect I am not able to understand exactly how the learned Judges in 66 Ind. Cas. 345 Bepin Krishna Ray v. Jogeshwar Ray (1), came to the conclusion that the second suit to set aside a decree in a previous suit upon the ground of mistake was possible, nor how it was that they felt themselves at liberty to differ from the decision of Jenkins, O. J., and Holmwood, J., in Kushudhaj Bhukta v. Braja Mohan Bhukta (4). In Mahendra Narain v. Lal Jhari Kuer (8), Wort, J., held that a suit for rectification of a decree in a previous suit and for delivery of property in accordance with the rectified decree could not be sustained in this country any more than it could in England. And in Janakdular Saran v. Ambica Prasad (9), Ohapman, J., expressed the opinion obiter that courts in India should refuse relief against previous judgments on the ground of mistake in pleadings or in the conduct of cases.

To attack by a second suit the decree in a previous suit between the same parties is, speaking generally, against the principle of res judicata. It is recognised that there are certain classes of cases in which it is possible for one of the parties to a decree to attack it in a second suit. For instance, a compromise decree may be attacked in a subsequent suit by one of the parties to it on the ground of mistake, as indeed it can be attacked upon other grounds such as fraud, misrepresentation, coercion etc. But that is not really in conflict with the principle of res judicata, because such a compromise decree is not the result of adjucation between the parties. It is merely the contract between the parties put into the form of a decree, and so it can be attacked subsequently in the same way in which a contract or the document embodying a contract can be attacked. In such cases the decree is indeed itself the instrument of contract, made by the hand of the Court but by the will of the parties. Such compromise decrees can be attacked as contracts can be attacked for such reasons as I have mentioned, or in cases where one of the parties is a guardian acting for a minor without the consent of the court, as in Ganesh Row v. Tuljaram Row (10), or where one of the parties is a minor ostensibly represented by a guardian who has not been properly appointed, as Partab Singh v. Bhabuti Singh (11). Then there are cases in which it is alleged that the previous decree has been obtained by fraud. It is well-known that a second suit may be brought to set aside a previous decree between the parties on the ground that it was obtained by fraud. There again there is no conflict with the principle of res judicata, because in such cases there has been no real and true adjudication between the parties. As was said long ago "Fraud vitiates everything" or, as Lord Coke said, "Fraud avoids all judicial acts." If it can be shown that a decree in a previous suit has been obtained by fraud, the very foundation of that decree has gone: what was supposed to have been a decision founded on the rights of the parties is shown to rest on inequity and deception. Both these two classes of cases, where the previous decree is a compromise decree and where the previous decree can be shown to have been obtained by fraud, we can put upon one side as not affecting the question whether decrees made after real adjudication between the parties can be attacked by any of them in a subsequent suit. As Wort, J., pointed out, judgments cannot be attacked in that way in subsequent suits or actions in England. Before the Judicature Act of 1873 the Court of Chancery could interfere with the proceedings of the Courts of Common Law by injunction; but, so far as I am aware, even the Court of Chancery could not formally set aside a judgment of one of the other Courts, and certainly that cannot be done since the Judicature Act of 1873. If that cannot be done in England, why is it possible to do it in India? There are various ways of attacking a decree—by appeal, review, amendment, applications to set aside ex parte decrees and applications to restore suits which have been dismissed ex parte. But what we are asked to say in this case is something quite different, that a decree made between the parties and final between them can be attacked in a subsequent suit and rectified on the ground of mistake. It is well-known that a right of appeal does not exist except when it is given by Statute or statutory provision. How can this right to attack a previous decree arise, and how can it exist consistently with the principle of res judicata? If there were any doubt about the matter, the fact that our procedure provides so many other ways of attacking a decree when necessary and provides them explicitly might be taken as an indication that this supposed method of attack by a subsequent suit did not exist. In my opinion this suit, so far as it was for rectification of the decree in O. S. No. 302 of 1919, was not sustainable.

On that Mr. Bhimasankaran, who appears for defendant No. 1, would have us say that the whole suit should have been dismissed. But the suit was not only for the rectification of the decree: it was also for the rectification of the mortgage-deed, and that was in itself clearly an admissible prayer. Mr. Bhimasankaran, however, contends that, as the mortgage-deed has ripened into a decree in O. S. No. 302 of 1919, the mortgage-deed has been swallowed up in the mortgage-decree and no longer remains for rectification. He would have us apply the principle that, when a mortgage decree for sale has been obtained, the mortgage security has been extinguished and the decree has been substituted for it, as laid down by Lord Haldane in Het Ram v. Shadi Ram (12). But although the mortgage may have been extinguished by the mortgage-decree, does it follow that the mortgage-deed can no longer be rectified? What a mortgage-decree for sale gives is the right to sell the mortgaged property, whatever it may be. Is it impossible after such a decree has been made to show in necessary cases what the mortgaged property is and in order to do that to get the mortgage deed rectified. In such a case, as in all cases of rectification of instruments, it is not the contract which is being corrected—that can never be done—but it is the instrument embodying the contract incorrectly which has to be rectified. I do not think that the fact that the mortgage has ripened into a decree for sale is enough to preclude the court from rectifying the mortgage-deed in proper cases when that can be done for proper purposes.

It has been suggested at a late stage in this case that the plaintiffs are guilty of laches. That might well be an argument in some cases against a plaintiff who asked for rectification after he had himself sued upon his document and got a decree upon it; but it cannot be put forward necessarily in all such cases. And it may be remarked that no such contention was, so far as we can see, ever put forward in any of the Courts before which this case has come until to day. It must be noticed that in this case the original mortgagee was a woman—probably an illiterate woman. She was not responsible in any way, so far as we can see, for the mis-description of the property in the mortgage deed. And the plaintiffs are not the original mortgagees: they come into this matter only as daughters and heirs of their mother, the original mortgagee, and were not responsible in any way for the mistake which has been made. In these circumstances I do not think we can attach any weight to this very belated accusation of laches.

But there are of course limits after which rectification of an instrument will not be made. The limit stated in s. 31 of the Specific Relief Act is when third parties have acquired rights in good faith and for value. But that does not apply in this case. There is also another limit, which as Mr. Bhimasankaran has contended, is exemplified in Caird v. Moss (13), where a decree has been obtained upon an unrectified instrument, and that decree has been executed and the money or property concerned has been recovered. Caird v. Moss (13), rests upon the old case of Marriot v. Hampton (14) that money paid under legal process cannot be recovered, and it was on that principle that in Caird v. Moss (13) the Judges of the Court of Appeal refused to allow rectification of the deed after judgment had been obtained upon it and the money concerned had been recovered and distributed. That too does not apply in this case. We are here still in the stage of a preliminary decree. In my opinion it was not too late in the circumstances when the plaintiffs came forward and prayed for rectification of the mortgage-deed.

And I see no difficulty in separating the mortgage-deed for this purpose from the decree which was obtained upon it. Mr. Bhimasankaran contends that even the rectification of the deed is not possible because the plaintiffs are shut out after the decree in the previous suit by the rule embodied in Expl. IV to s. 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure that "any matter which might and ought to have been made a ground of defence or attack in such former suit shall be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in such suit." Can we say that this ought to have been a matter of attack in the previous suit? Possibly it might have been urged, if it were the defendants who were seeking rectification, that it ought to have been made a matter of defence in the previous suit that a decree was asked for on the basis that the plaintiffs should bring to sale land which was never mortgaged. But here it has been found that both the parties to the deed made a mistake in having Survey No. 166 entered for 168. In my opinion we certainly cannot apply the principle of the Explanation to the plaintiffs.

So far as I can see therefore there is no reason why the decree made in favour of the plaintiffs for the rectification of the mortgage-deed should not stand. Now, if the plaintiffs could get so far as that, why could they not get what they want in this matter. If the mortgage-deed is rectified and the right survey number is entered in it, though the survey number was copied into the plaintiff in O. S. No. 302 of 1919, the deed as it then stood why could they not apply for amendment of their plaint? An amendment of a plaint may be applied for at any stage in the proceedings; and in this case we have not even got to execution proceedings—the suit is still pending, and a final decree has not yet been made. Certainly such an application for amendment would be very late now and would have been very late at the date of the plaint in the present suit. But in the circumstances it might have been made, and I do not see any reason why it should have been refused. Amendments have been allowed by this Court as late as execution proceedings, as is shown by Appassa Rowthen v. Muhamad Rowthen (15), and the cases quoted in it. And, if the plaintiffs got to that stage and had their plaint amended, what would prevent them from going to the court which had disposed so far of their first suit, O. S. No. 302 of 1919, and applying for review of the preliminary decree on the ground that there was an error patent on the face of the record, as it would be patent if the survey number were altered in their plaint? That is a course they could have adopted and can adopt now. They might even, I think, in such a case as this without applying for review ask the District Munsif to amend his decree under s. 152 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Whichever of these courses were adopted, they would arrive at the same position at which they have now arrived, namely their preliminary decree would be amended. It must be noticed that in this case the second suit was brought in the same court as the first suit, so that there is no difficulty about their decree having been amended by another court. In my opinion the plaintiffs in this case adopted the wrong course. They sued for rectification of their decree on the ground of mistake, which, so far as I can see was an inadmissible prayer. But they got the amendment of that decree, which is exactly what they might have got by first getting their mortgage deed rectified and then amending their plaint and applying for review of the preliminary decree or amendment of that decree under s. 52 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That being so, although in my opinion they have adopted the wrong course, I can see no reason why at this stage we need interfere with Waller, J.'s decree, and I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

Anantakrishna Ayyar, J.—I agree. The plaintiffs represent the mortgagees, defendants Nos. 1 and 2 represent the mortgagors—(the mortgage being dated 1st October 1906), and the 3rd defendant is a subsequent mortgagee from the mortgagors under a document dated 12th February 1921. The plaintiffs obtained a preliminary decree on the mortgage of 1906 in O. S. No. 302 of 1919 on the file of the District Munsif of Razole. They subsequently discovered that a mistake was made in the mortgage-deed in mentioning the correct survey number of the property mortgaged. Instead of mentioning the correct survey number—168—the mortgage document mentioned the mortgaged property as survey number 166,—in Munganda village. The plaintiffs applied to the District Munsif, after the preliminary decree was passed in O. S. No. 302 of 1919, to have the mistake corrected. The District Munsif was of opinion that the question whether there was, or was not,—a mistake in respect of the survey number in the mortgage-deed could not be gone into except in a fresh suit. The present suit was accordingly instituted by the plaintiffs—the mortgagees—in the very same District Munsif's Court against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 who represent the mortgagors and the 3rd defendant, the subsequent mortgagee from defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The first prayer in the plaint was to have the mortgage bond dated 1st October 1906 amended by substituting Survey No. 168 in the place of No. 166,—the property really intended and agreed to be mortgaged being Survey No. 168. Plaintiffs also prayed that the decree in O. S. No. 302 of 1919 mentioned above, should be amended suitably by substituting the correct survey number. The 3rd defendant pleaded that he was a bona fide mortgagee from defendants Nos. 1 and 2 subsequent to the mortgage of 1906, whereas defendants Nos. 1 and 2 seem to have contended that there was no mistake at all in respect of the survey number. The lower Courts have found against the contentions of the defendants. The finding is that there was a mutual mistake between the parties in mentioning the survey number in the mortgage-deed and that it was Survey No. 166 that was really intended and agreed to be included in the mortgage document. In fact, as the lower Appellate Court remarks, the mortgagors had no land bearing Survey No. 166 in that particular village. That is a finding of fact, and we are bound by it in second appeal. The trial court also found that the 3rd defendant was not a bona fide subsequent mortgagee. That would seem to be the finding of the lower Appellate Court also. That finding also is binding upon us. On these findings the second appeal preferred by the 1st defendant to this court was dismissed by Waller, J. It was argued before the learned Judge that a suit would not lie to correct a mistake in a decree passed by a Court. The learned Judge overruled that contention relying on 66 Ind. Cas. 345 Bepin Krishna Ray v. Jogeshwar Ray (1). The learned Judge also relied on a decision of this Court reported as Venkatarama Aiyar v. Elumalai Naicker (2). The first defendant has preferred this Letters Patent Appeal against the decision of the learned Judge.

The first question that arises is whether a mortgage deed could be rectified in respect of a mutual mistake, after a decree had been passed on the basis of that mortgage. The learned Advocate for the appellant argued that after the decree was passed on such mortgage, the right to amend the mortgage-deed came to an end. I am unable to agree with that contention. Section 31 of the Specific Relief Act indicates the limits of the power of the court to rectify an instrument when a mutual mistake is proved. The circumstance that a decree has been passed on such mortgage is not,—in my opinion, by itself—a legal bar to such rectification being granted, when otherwise a case for rectification is made out. In this respect I am inclined to follow the observations made by the learned Judges in Bepin Krishna Ray v. Jogeshwar Ray (1). At page 273* the learned Judges state the point for decision as follows:

"Here the question of fundamental importance, stripped of all technicalities, is, whether the mutual mistake of the parties to the mortgage transaction manifested in the mortgage-deed, which has extended into judicial proceedings, automatically as it were, without mistake on the part of the Judge, is still capable of rectification."

They answer the question as follows:

"On principle, the answer should clearly be in the affirmative; for, as Neville, J., observed in Thompson v. Hickman (16), to grant relief by way of rectification where the error has crept into one document and refuse it where it is embodied in two, is inconsistent with equitable principles, for equity regards the substance rather than the form of a transaction. There is no substantial reason, for instance, why we should not hold that where the same mutual mistake has been repeated in each one of a chain of conveyances, under such circumstances as to entitle any one of the purchasers to a reformation—('reformation' seems to be the term used in American text books, whereas our Act uses the word 'rectification',—as against his immediate vendor, equity may work back through all, and entitle the last purchaser to a reformation against the original grantor."

So far I agree with the observations made by the learned Judges in the Calcutta Law Journal case. In the case before us, the proceedings have not gone beyond the stage of passing the decree; the case is not complicated by the existence of a purchaser in court-auction in execution of the decree,—the purchaser having brought the property with the wrong survey number mentioned in the proclamation and sale certificate. I therefore, overrule the contention of the learned Advocate for the appellant that simply because a decree has been passed in this case, the court's jurisdiction to rectify the mortgage-deed has ceased.

The second contention is really more difficult to deal with. The learned Advocate for the appellant argued that no suit lies in India to rectify a decree passed by another competent court on the allegation that there was mutual mistake in respect of the mortgage-deed which was the subject-matter of suit in the prior litigation. Cases of mutual mistakes in respect of compromises—or compromise decrees subsequently passed on the basis of such compromises—on which the learned Advocate for the plaintiffs-respondents relied, are, in my opinion, distinguishable. For, as observed by Jenkins, O. J., in Kushodhaj Bhukta v. Braja Mohan Bhukta (4),

"But that class of cases is governed by a principle that has no application here. It is well-settled that a contract of the parties is none the less a contract because there is superadded to it the command of a Judge. It still is a contract of the parties, and as the contract is capable of being rectified for an appropriate mistake, so, as the necessary consequence is the decree which is merely a more formal expression given to that contract."

The case in Huddersfield Banking Company Ltd. v. Henry Lister & Son, Ltd. (17), is an English authority on that point. But it does not, in my opinion, follow from the above that the decree of a competent court is liable to be corrected in another litigation by an independent suit for the purpose, even though the said decree accurately expresses the court's intention in passing it. No doubt, it has been held that when a prior decree was obtained by fraud, a subsequent suit would lie to have it declared that the said decree is null and void on that ground. That stands upon quite a different footing, in my opinion. The point that has to be considered now is whether a fresh suit is maintainable to rectify an alleged mistake in the decree passed in a prior suit when the prior decree appropriately expresses the intention of the court which passed it. No case was cited before us in which an English Court has held that such a suit would lie. Even if any English authority on that point be available, one would find it difficult to apply such a decision to a case governed by our Code of Civil Procedure. When once a decree between the parties has been passed by a court of competent jurisdiction, the Code provides the various methods by which such a decree could be amended or reversed. The Privy Council in Venkata Subbamma Rao v. Venkata Rama Rao (18) held that a decree passed by a competent court is subject to alteration only in the modes prescribed by the Code. See I. L. R. 24 Mad P. 10. See also Sri Gopal v. Pirithi Singh (19), Somasundaram Chetty v. Subramanian Chetty (20). I may also refer to Drew v. Willis (21) where Lord Esher, M. R., observed as follows at page 452*.

"No Court has such a power of setting aside an order which has been properly made, unless it is given by Statute"

The subsequent observations are also instructive and may be referred to. The difficulty therefore arises whether the particular prayer in the present plaint which asks that the decree in the prior suit might be suitably amended and rectified is such as could properly be granted in the present suit. Our attention was drawn to the case Jogeshwar Atha v. Ganga Bishnu (6) decided by Maclean, O. J., and Pargiter, J., as authority for the position that such a suit would lie,—being one of a civil nature and not being expressly prohibited by any provision of law. The question arose in Calcutta subsequent to the decision in Jogeshwar Atha v. Ganga Bishnu (6) and in Kushodhaj Bhukta v. Braja Mohan Bhukta (4) Jenkins, O. J., and Holmwood, J., were not prepared to follow the decision in Jogeshwar Atha v. Ganga Bishnu (6). Having regard to the scheme and provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, I find it difficult to understand how a subsequent suit would lie to rectify the decree in a prior suit. The Patna High Court in Mahendra Narain v. Lal Jhari Kuer (8) and Janakdular Saran v. Ambica Prasad (9) also had difficulty in holding that such a suit would lie. See also 14 Ind. Cas. 23 Bhonda Singh v. Dowlat Ray (5) Now, on examining the reasons given by the learned Judges in the case in 66 Ind. Cas. 345 Bepin Krishna Ray v. Jogeshwar Ray (1) I do not find that the arguments advanced in Kushodhaj Bhukta v. Braja Mohan Bhukta (4) have been really refuted. If Venkata- rama Aiyar v. Elumalai Naicker (2) be a decision on this question, of course we should ordinarily be found to follow the same. But on this point, there is no real discussion by the learned Judges. The reason would seem to be that the decree complained against in second appeal in that case did not,—from what appears from printed papers,—contain any direction regarding amendments of any prior decree. The decree in that case simply rectified the mistake in the mortgage document. That being so, the decision in Venkatarama Aiyar v. Elumalai Naicker (2) is no real authority on this point. One should rather be very careful before laying down that, prima facie, fresh suits would lie to rectify decrees already passed between persons who were properly represented in the same when the prior decree correctly expressed the intention of the court. It seems proper that rectification of a decree should ordinarily be done by the court by which it was passed. What, then, is the relief that should properly be granted in such cases, which, while working for justice, would also be in accordance with the procedure prescribed by our Code? It seems to me that the proper prayer to be asked in the second suit in such a case is to have the mortgage instrument rectified. The result of obtaining such a decree would be that the decree-holder in the prior suit would be in a position to ask the court which passed the decree in the first suit to allow necessary amendments to be made in the plaint and in the decree passed therein. Courts would always be anxious to give effect to the decision passed between the parties relevant to the matter before them. If after obtaining a decree in the latter suit, the decree-holder should make a request to the court which passed the decree in the mortgage suit to have the necessary corrections carried out, it goes without saying that the courts would—in ordinary cases—allow its records to be rectified accordingly. There are cases which show that a decree-holder could be prevented, by an injunction issued in a subsequent suit, from executing the prior decree; and courts would give effect to such subsequent decree and refuse execution of the prior decree. By analogy, we may also refer to cases where decrees and other proceedings passed by court have been, by later decisions, declared to be not binding upon some or all of the parties to the same. When such a decision is passed between the parties in a later proceeding, then, as the Privy Council has pointed out, when the courts which passed the prior decree or proceedings are approached to give effect to the later decision, they would always endeavour to give effect to such later decision passed between the parties and do the needful. I may refer to Ganesh Row v. Tuljaram Row (10).

The question therefore is reduced to a simple matter of procedure—whether the plaintiffs in this particular case could properly ask for the second relief, when the first relief would substantially be enough to safeguard their rights, and whether the second relief should be granted to them. But I am unable to agree with the contention of the learned Advocate for the appellant that the present suit should be held to be not maintainable simply because the plaintiffs have also asked for the second relief by way of amendment of the previous decree. Here I should like to mention that so far as this High Court is concerned it has always been anxious to have mistakes regarding boundaries and survey numbers of properties in suit, corrected, though such mistakes have crept in, not only in the plaints but also in decrees subsequently passed on the basis of such plaints, whenever the same could be done without working injustice in any way. The cases are all referred to in Appasa Rowthen v. Muhammad Rowthen (15). There is, therefore, no real difficulty in practice,—since the plaintiffs by obtaining a decree in respect of the first prayer would ordinarily be able to have the corrections carried out in the prior decree and proceedings.

While agreeing with the appellant's learned Advocate that the second prayer, would really be unnecessary, and should not be granted in the view mentioned already, I do not however see any real reason for modifying the decree passed in the particular case before us. As I already remarked, after obtaining such a decree, it would be open to the plaintiffs to ask the court in which prior proceedings took place to have the necessary amendments made. Here the two courts are the same, and with that advantage, the court by its decree in the present suit directed the necessary rectifications to be made both in the mortgage-deed and in the decree and proceedings in the prior suit. That portion of the decree has been confirmed by the lower Appellate Court also. In these circumstances, the objection is not a substantial one, but rather a technical one;—and further I do not think that the appellant has in any way been materially prejudiced by reason of the same. The merits have been found against the appellant by both the lower Courts. On the whole, having regard to all the circumstances of this case, no sufficient grounds have been made out for our interference in Letters Patent Appeal.

On the question whether a second suit on the basis of the amended mortgage document is the only—or, appropriate—remedy open to the plaintiffs it is not necessary for me to say anything in the present case. The mortgage before us comprises other items also, so does the decree in the prior suit; and there is, further, no question of limitation.

For these reasons, I agree that this Letters Patent Appeal should be dismissed with costs.

LORD TOMLIN, LORD THAKERTON, AND LORD
MACMILLAN

THE MONTREAL LIGHT, HEAT AND POWER CONSOLIDATED AND OTHERS—

versus

RESPONDENT.

Municipal Corporation—Taxation—Gas mains laid in streets, whether immoveable property—Liability to be taxed as such—'Immoveable property', 'Buildings', meanings of.

The term 'buildings' covers constructions such as gas mains laid under public streets, and gas mains so laid must be regarded as immoveable property by their nature in the territory in which they are physically situate and are therefore taxable as immoveable property in the Municipality in which they are laid. [p. 862, col. 1.]

Mr. Warwick Chipman, K. C., for the Appellants.

Mr. C. P. Beaubien, K. C., for the Respondent.

Lord Tomlin—The question under consideration in this appeal is whether the appellants or either of them are or is liable to the respondent City of Outremont for Municipal and school taxes in respect of gas mains lying under the public streets of the city. The mains are the property of the second appellant. The gas undertaking of the second appellant is operated by the first appellant. The soil of the streets under which the mains lie is not owned by the appellants or either of them.

The mains were laid and are maintained and the supply of gas is given under a contract dated the 24th August, 1904, between the respondent and the second appellant, by which the second appellant agreed upon the conditions therein set out to supply gas in the City of Outremont for the term of 30 years.

The gas works of the second appellant at which the gas supplied under the agreement is generated, and with which the mains are connected, have throughout been and are situate in the City of Montreal.

Under the terms of an agreement dated the 7th June, 1916, the first appellant (then called the Civic Investment and Industrial Company) took over, from the 1st August, 1916, the operation of the undertaking of the second appellant, and has since continued and still continues to operate such undertaking.

For the years ending respectively the 31st October, 1925, the 31st October, 1926, and the 31st October, 1927, the respondents assessed for Municipal taxation purposes the gas mains of the second appellant's undertaking lying under the public streets of the City of Outremont and entered in the valuation rolls the name of the second appellant as proprietor of such mains.

School taxes in respect of the same mains for the year ending the 30th June, 1925, were included in the collection rolls of the respondent as the result of certain resolutions of the respondent and of the School Commissioners and School Trustees of the City of Outremont, ratified by Act 11 Geo. V, c. 114, s. 3, which section was repealed and re-enacted by the Act 16 Geo. V, c. 74.

School taxes in respect of the same mains for the years ending respectively the 30th June, 1926, and the 30th June, 1927, imposed by the Act 15 Geo. V, c. 45, s. 18, as amended by the Act 16 Geo. V, c. 47, s. 1, were also included in the respondent's collection rolls.

The respondent launched an action in the Superior Court against the first appellant to recover the Municipal and school taxes on the gas mains in question for the years 1924-25, 1925-26, 1926-27, with interest.

The second appellant was subsequently added as mis en cause. The Superior Court (Loranger J.) maintained the respondent's action for $ 3,262'82 and condemned each of the appellants to pay the said sum with interest at 6 per cent. from 1st December, 1926, and declared their immoveables situated in the territory of the respondent affected by the respondent's privilege for the payment of the taxes in question, the whole with costs.

The main reasons given by the trial Judge for his decision were:—(i) That the gas mains were immovable by nature as being buildings, within the meaning of Art. 376 of the Civil Code (following Montreal Light, Heat and Power Consolidated v. City of Westmount (1), and were situate within the territorial limits of the respondent and were taxable by it; (ii) That the mis-en cause was the owner of the gas mains and that the defendant was in possession thereof as owner and was the lessee and in possession thereof and that both were liable for the tax imposed; (iii) That the Superior Court had jurisdiction in respect of the school taxes on the ground that they were merged with the Municipal taxes, the demand affected future rights and was subject to evocation to the Superior Court and the exclusive jurisdiction of the Circuit Court did not pertain where the claim was made by the Municipality.

The appellants appealed to the Court of King's Bench for the Province of Quebec (Appeal Side) and on the 30th October, 1930, the Court (Teller, Howard, Letourneau, Hall and Gaipeault JJ.) affirmed the trial Judge. Letourneau, J., however, dissented in respect that he was of opinion that the first appellant was not liable for the Municipal taxes because such appellant was not entered on the valuation rolls and because the mains, in his view, were not "land" within the meaning of s. 534 of the Cities and Towns Act permitting the collection of taxes from the tenant, occupant or other possessor of land.

The matter then came before their Lordships' Board at the instance of the appellants, who contended:—

First, that the gas mains were not liable to taxation unless they were immovables within the meaning of the term "immovable" in s. 521 of the Cities and Towns Act, which confers the taxing power.

Secondly, that the meaning of the word "immovable" in that section was not to be ascertained by reference to the Quebec Civil Code; and that upon the true construction of the Cities and Towns Act without reference to the Code the word did not cover the gas mains in question.

Thirdly, that even if the word "immovable" was to be construed by reference to the Quebec Civil Code, gas mains such as these were not immovables within the meaning of the Code.

Fourthly, that even if gas mains under public streets were taxable subject-matter, they were only taxable as immovables by reason of the object to which they were attached, in this case the gas works in Montreal, and that, therefore, they were not taxable in Outremont.

Fifthly, that the first appellant, not being on the valuation rolls as owner, was not liable and could not be attacked as occupant or possessor, because immovables are not land within s. 534 of the Cities and Towns Act.

Sixthly, that the second appellant could not be made liable as mis-en cause if the first appellant was not liable.

Seventhly, that there was no jurisdiction in the Superior Court to deal with the case so far as the claim was to recover school taxes, exclusive jurisdiction to deal with school taxes residing in the Circuit Court; and Eighthly, that the form of the judgment was in any case wrong inasmuch as under it the respondent could recover the sum sued for twice over, once from each appellant.

The first four points are branches of one principal question whether these gas mains are taxable subject matter in Outremont, having regard to their nature and to the terms of the Statutes conferring the taxing power. These points can, therefore, be dealt with together.

The power of the respondent to raise Municipal taxes depends upon the Cities and Towns Act (R. S. Q. 1925, Ch. 102).

The provisions of the Act directly relevant to the taxing power are those next set out:—

Section 485 corresponds to Art. 5696, 1909 R. S. Q., which by the Act 5 Geo. V, cap. 23, s. 72, was replaced for the respondent by the following:—

"5696. The assessors shall, each year, at the time and in the manner ordered by the Council, assess the taxable property of the Municipality, according to its real value. In assessing every property, they shall value separately the land, the buildings thereon erected, and the annual value of such property, and enter each valuation in a separate column of the roll.

"They shall also enter in the roll the names of all occupants, and the amount of annual rent paid by each of them. The Council may, by resolution, relieve the assessors from the duty of making a valuation roll of the taxable property oftener than every three years; and in such case, the Council shall revise the roll every year, or cause it to be revised by the assessors, as it deems expedient, giving the same notices and delays as for the making of the yearly valuation roll."

"488. The actual value of the real estate in the Municipality assessable for purposes of taxation shall comprise lands and buildings, workshops and machinery and their accessories thereon erected, and all the improvements made thereto."

"521 (in part). The Council may impose and levy, annually, on every immovable in the Municipality, a tax of not more than 2 per cent. of the real value as shown on the valuation roll."

There are, however, a number of other sections relating to ancillary matters which are said by the appellants to be relevant as throwing light upon the meaning of the word "immovable." These sections include the following:—

"502. After every change of owner or occupant of any lot of land set forth in the valuation roll in force, the Council, on a written petition for that purpose, and upon sufficient proof, may erase the name of the former owner or occupant, and enter on such roll the name of the new one."

"520.—(1) The following property shall not be subject to taxation:—

(a) Lands belonging to His Majesty or held in trust for the service of His Majesty;

(b) The property of the Federal and Provincial Governments and the Municipal corporation;

(c) That belonging to fabriques or religious, charitable or educational institutions or corporations, or occupied by such fabriques, institutions or corporations for the purposes for which they were established and not possessed by them solely for the purpose of deriving a revenue therefrom;

(d) Property possessed and used for public worship, episcopal residences, presbyteries, parsonages and cemeteries, and their dependencies. The presbyteries and parsonages above mentioned include any house occupied as a residence by the priest or minister in charge of any church, whether such house be the property of the fabrique or of the religious institution or corporation, the owner of the church, or whether it be occupied by the priest or minister as a tenant, provided that only one presbytery, parsonage or residence for each church shall benefit from the exemption granted by this section;

(e) Immovables used for libraries open to the public free of charge;

(f) All educational establishments which receive no grant from the Municipality where they are situated, as well as their dependencies and the lands on which they are erected.

"(2) The exemptions mentioned in sub-s. 1 of this section shall not apply to persons occupying under a title other than that of owner, immovable property belonging to His Majesty or to the Federal or Provincial Government, who shall be assessed as if they were the actual owners of such immovables, and be liable for the payment of the general and special real estate taxes.

"(3) The owners and occupants of the property mentioned in paras. (c), (d), (e) and (f) of sub-s. 1 of this section shall nevertheless be bound for the cost of the works required for the maintenance of the streets situated opposite such property in the Municipalities where such streets are not, wholly or in part at the charge and expense of the Municipality under the provisions of this Act. Such properties shall nevertheless be taxable for public lighting for the purchase and maintenance of fire-fighting apparatus, and for the use of water.

"They shall also be taxable for the opening and maintenance of streets, when such work is wholly or in part at the charge and expense of the Municipality, provided that the opening or maintenance work on streets dependent on such property be assumed by the Municipality.

"For the purposes of this sub-s. 3, only the actual value of the lands shall be considered, notwithstanding the provisions of s. 488, to establish the tax to be imposed on the property mentioned in paras. (c), (d), and (f) of sub-s. 1 of the section."

"530. The cadastral number given to immovable property upon the official plan and in the book of reference for the territorial division in which such property is situated shall, for taxation purposes, be a sufficient description and identification of such property in the valuation and collection rolls."

"534. Municipal taxes, imposed on any land may be collected from the tenant, occupant or other possessor of such land as well as from the owner thereof, or from any subsequent acquirer of such land, even where such tenant, occupant, possessor or acquirer is not entered on the valuation roll."

"550. Within fifteen days of the order of the Council, the clerk shall give public notice of the day, hour and place where the sale by auction will be held. The notice shall contain a description, according to the provisions of Art. 2168 of the Civil Code, of the immovables the sale whereof is so ordered, and it shall be posted up at the places fixed by the Council for publication of Municipal notices.

"If the publication of Municipal notices be made in the newspapers in accordance with s. 373 the clerk shall post up the notice of sale in two public places in the Municipality."

"555. The purchaser shall thereupon be seized of the immovable adjudged, and may enter into possession thereof, subject to the same being redeemed within the year following, but shall not remove timber nor the buildings therefrom during the said year."

"556. Within the eight days following the adjudication, the clerk shall transmit to the registrar a list of the immovables so sold for Municipal taxes, with the name of the purchaser of each of such immovables."

Before commenting upon the provisions of the Cities and Towns Act it will be convenient to set out also the relevant provisions of the Quebec Civil Code. Such provisions are as follows:—

"374. All property incorporeal as well as corporeal is moveable or immovable."

"375. Property is immovable either by its nature, or by its destination, or by reason of the object to which it is attached, or lastly by determination of law."

"376. Lands and buildings are immovable by their nature."

"377. Windmills and water-mills, built on piles and forming part of the buildings, are also immovable by their nature when they are constructed for a permanency."

"378. Crops uncut and fruits unplucked are also immovable."

"According as grain is cut and as fruit is plucked, they become moveable in so far as regards the portion cut or plucked. The same rule applies to trees; they are immovable so long as they are attached to the ground by their roots and they become moveable as soon as they are felled."

"379. Moveable things which a proprietor has placed on his real property for a permanency or which he has incorporated therewith, are immovable."

able by their destination so long as they remain there.

"Thus, within these restrictions, the following and other like objects are immovable:—

(1) Presses, boilers, stills, vats and tuns;

(2) All utensils necessary for working forges, paper mills and other manufactories.

"Manure, and the straw and other substances intended for manure, are likewise immovable by destination."

"380. Those things are considered as being attached for a permanency which are placed by the proprietor and fastened with iron and nails, embedded in plaster, lime or cement or which cannot be removed without breakage, or without destroying or deteriorating that part of the property to which they are attached.

"Mirrors, pictures and other ornaments are considered to have been placed permanently when without them the part of the room they cover would remain incomplete or imperfect."

381. Rights of emphyteusis, of usufruct of immovable things, of use and habitation, the right to cut timber perpetually or for a limited time, servitudes, and rights or actions which tend to obtain possession of an immovable, are immovable by reason of the objects to which they are attached."

"382. All moveable property, of which the law ordains or authorises the realisation, becomes immovable by determination of law, either absolutely or for certain purposes."

"2168. When a copy of the plans and books of reference for the whole of a registration division has been deposited in the office for such division, and notice has been given by proclamation in the manner mentioned in Art. 2169, the number given to a lot upon the plan and in the book of reference is the true description of such lot, and is sufficient as such in any document whatever; and any part of such lot is sufficiently designated by stating that it is a part of such lot and mentioning who is the owner thereof and the properties coterminous thereto; and any piece of land composed of parts of more than one numbered lot is sufficiently designated by stating that it is so composed and mentioning what part of each numbered lot it contains.

"No description of an immovable in the notice of application for confirmation of title, or in the notice of a sale by the sheriff or by forced licitation, or of any sale having the effect of a sheriff's sale, or in the sheriff's deed, or in the judgment of confirmation, will be deemed sufficient unless it is made in conformity with the provisions of this article.

"As soon as such plans and books of reference have been deposited and notice thereof has been given, notaries passing Acts concerning immovables indicated on such plan are bound to designate such immovables by the number given to them upon such plan and in the book of reference, in the manner above prescribed; in default of such designation the registration does not affect the lot in question, unless there is filed a requisition or notice indicating the number on the plan and book of reference as being that of the lot intended to be affected by such registration."

Having regard to the terms of the Education Act (R. S. Q. 1925, Ch. 133) and the Protestant School Act (15 Geo. V, c. 45), the taxable subject matters in respect of school taxes are admittedly to be determined by the same considerations as the taxable subjects in respect of Municipal taxes, inasmuch as the school taxes under the Education Act are exigible upon "all taxable property in the School Municipality," and those under the Protestant School Act are exigible upon "all immovable property" in the Municipality inscribed in the neutral panel.

It is to be observed that in regard to the question now being considered the appellants' case involves an impeachment of the conclusions reached by the Supreme Court of Canada in Montreal Light, Heat and Power Consolidated v. The City of Westmount (1). In that case gas mains and electric poles and wires were held to be taxable in the Municipality in which they were situate.

Their Lordships, after full consideration, are of opinion that the reasoning of the majority of the court contained in the judgment in the last-mentioned case delivered by Anglin O. J. C. is well founded.

The word "immovable" in s. 520 (1) of the Cities and Towns Act must, in their Lordships' view of the construction of that Act, bear the meaning given to it by the Quebec Civil Code. It is true that there is in the Cities and Towns Act a lack of precision in the use of terms which renders the task of construction unnecessarily difficult, but there is nothing in that Act to restrict the meaning attributed to the word "immovable" by the Civil Code. The words "land" and "lands" are in the Cities and Towns Act used in a sense wide enough to cover immovables (see and compare sub-s. (1) (a) of s. 520 and sub-s. 2 of the same section), but this use of "land" and "lands" does not restrict the meaning of immovables. Nor does the reference in s. 530 to the cadastral number given to immovable property have the effect of excluding from immovables those immovables which have not or cannot have any cadastral number. Section 530 only renders a reference to the cadastral number, where there is one, a sufficient description of the immovable.

What then is an immovable under the Civil Code? A gas main laid in the earth is an immovable in the sense that it is physically a construction fixed in the earth, though the individual pipes of which it is made up were moveable before they came to form part of the construction.

Of the four means specified in s. 375 of the Civil Code by reason of which property is to be treated as immovable, three can certainly be excluded. The gas mains are not immoveable by destination, because the soil in which they are placed does not belong to the appellants. They are not immoveable by reason of the object to which they are attached. Into that category fall only things in themselves moveable which are permanently attached to an immoveable. The gas mains were never moveables, though constructed out of things which were moveables. It is not suggested that the gas mains are immoveable by determination of law. There therefore remains only the category of immoveables by their nature. These are in s. 376 defined in the words "Lands and buildings are immoveable by their nature."

It is said that gas mains are not buildings (batiments) within the meaning of that term as used in s. 376, and an argument based upon Art. 523 of the Code Napoleon, which makes "uyaux" immoveable, was addressed to their Lordships in support of that view. Their Lordships are of opinion that the term buildings (batiments) covers constructions such as these gas mains, and that these mains must be regarded as immoveable by their nature in the territory in which they are physically situate, and are therefore taxable subjects in the City of Outremont.

With regard to the fifth point, it has already been indicated that the term "land" in the Cities and Towns Act includes immoveables, and this being so, their Lordships think that the first appellant is liable for the taxes under s. 534 of the Act as occupant or possessor of the mains. In these circumstances the sixth point does not arise, and the second appellant is liable as owner, whose name is on the rolls.

The seventh point raises a matter of jurisdiction. Could the school taxes be recovered in the Superior Court?

Section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that the Superior Court has original jurisdiction in all suits or actions which are not exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court or of the Exchequer Court of Canada.

Section 54 of the same Code is, so far as material, as follows:

"54. The Circuit Court has ultimate jurisdiction, to the exclusion of the Superior Court:—

- (1) * * *
- (2) In all suits for school taxes or school fees, and all suits concerning assessments for the building and repairing of churches, parsonages and churchyards whatever may be the amount of such suits."

The school taxes for the first year of assessment (viz., 1924-25) of the three years under consideration were exigible under the provisions of the Education Act.

That Act empowered the School Commissioners and Trustees to cause to be levied by taxation the taxes necessary for the support of the schools under their control.

Section 398 of the Act was as follows:

"The local Council of any city, town, village, or rural Municipality, when required by the school board of a School Municipality situate wholly or partly in its territory, shall collect the taxes of such School Municipality at the same time as its own."

The Cities and Towns Act contained the following provisions with regard to the collection of school taxes:—

"537. The Council shall, on the requisition of the school commissioners or trustees of any School Municipality situated within the Municipality, accept the school assessment roll or the certified extract therefrom presented by them, and order the Treasurer to collect such taxes, in the same manner and at the same time as Municipal taxes."

"539. If the Municipal Council has ordered, by resolution, that the collection of school taxes be made at the same time and in the same manner as Municipal taxes, the Treasurer shall enter in the general collection roll the amount of such taxes, collect them and remit them forthwith to the Secretary-Treasurer of schools. In such case actions to recover taxes shall be taken by the Municipal corporation."

In the year 1919 certain resolutions were passed by the School Commissioners and School Trustees of Outremont and by the City Council of the City of Outremont providing for the collection by the City of the school taxes.

These resolutions were confirmed by 11 Geo. V. c. 114 (repealed and re enacted by 16 Geo. V. c. 74), whereby the following articles were added for the respondent to the provisions of the Cities and Towns Act:—

5748A. The city may, under agreement with the school commissioners or trustees of any school Municipality situated within the Municipality, upon resolution to that effect passed by said school commissioners or trustees, as the case may be, and by the City Council, acquire the school assessment roll or a certified extract therefrom presented by said school commissioners or trustees, and pay the said school commissioners or trustees the amount mentioned on such school assessment roll or certified extract therefrom, less the amount of a commission of not more than 1 per cent., at the dates and in the manner agreed upon."

5748B. The resolution passed by the school commissioners of the municipality of the city of Outremont, in the county of Westmount, on the 10th day of March, 1919, the resolution passed by the school trustees for the Municipality of the city of Outremont, in the county of Westmount, on 11th day of March, 1919, and the resolution passed by the City Council of the city of Outremont on the 2nd day of April, 1919, are hereby declared legal and valid for all intents and purposes.

"5755. The payment of Municipal taxes and of school taxes, in cases provided for in Arts. 5748, 5748A and 5748B, may be also claimed by an action brought in the name of the corporation before the Magistrate's court, or the Circuit Court for the county or district, on before the mayor, or two or more Councillors acting ex-officio as justices of the peace, or before the recorder's court if there be one."

The courts in Canada have taken the view that under the statutory provisions referred to above the Municipality could recover the school taxes in the Superior Court. On such a matter of domestic procedure their Lordships' Board would be reluctant to differ from the conclusions reached by the courts in Canada unless such conclusions were clearly shown to be wrong. Their Lordships are, however, satisfied that upon the true construction of these provisions the Municipality are empowered to sue for the school taxes in the Superior Court. The words "in the same manner and at the same time" in s. 537 of the Cities and Towns Act, read with the words "may be also claimed" in Art 5755, introduced by 11 Geo. V, c. 114, render it clear, in their Lordships' view, that the Municipality were empowered to recover school taxes in the Superior Court, and that to that extent the provisions of s. 54 of the Code of Civil Procedure were repealed. This point of the appellants therefore fails so far as the school taxes for the year 1924-25 are concerned.

The school taxes for the year 1925-26 and 1926-27 were exigible under the Protestant School Act, which provides as follows:—

"16—(2) From and after the 1st of July, 1925, in the various cities, towns or other local Municipalities mentioned in para. 1 of this section, there is hereby imposed a uniform tax, [to be entitled the Protestant School Tax, (see sub-s 1), at the rate of 12 mills in dollar, upon all the immovable property inscribed in the neutral panel of each such city, town or local Municipality. . . .

"(5) The taxes above mentioned shall be levied and collected by the proper Municipal authorities, at the same time as the Municipal taxes, and, notwithstanding any special or general provision of law governing any such Municipality, the amount of the said Protestant school tax so levied and the share of the said tax upon the neutral panel accruing for the benefit of Protestant education, shall be paid over to the Central Board by the proper Municipal authorities. . . ."

Their Lordships are of opinion that upon the true construction of these provisions the Municipality had the same powers for recovering the taxes under this Act as they had for recovering the Municipal taxes, including a power to sue for them in the Superior Court, and that to that extent the provisions of s. 54 of the Code of Civil Procedure were repealed. In regard, therefore, to the school taxes for the two last-mentioned years the conclusion must be the same as with regard to the school taxes for the first of the three years in question.

With regard to the eighth point, their Lordships having heard and taken note of the statement of the respondent's Counsel that the respondent did not desire to treat, and could not treat, the order which has been made as entitling them to recover more than the one sum of $1,262'82 and interest on the footing of the joint and several liability of the appellants, their Lordships do not think it necessary to take the point into consideration.

In the result, therefore, in their Lordships' judgment the appeal fails and should be dismissed.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

The appellants must pay the respondent's costs of this appeal.

Income-tax—Insurance against loss of profits, resulting from fire—Moneys received by assured, whether liable to be taxed—'Income,' 'profits,' meanings of—Interpretation of Statutes—Words and phrases—Includes, meaning of.

Moneys received by an assessee under use and occupancy policies insuring him against loss of profits resulting from cessation of business caused by fire are liable (under the British Columbia Taxation Act, 1924) to be brought into account by them for assessment to income-tax. Such moneys can fairly be regarded as 'income from the business.' [p. 867, cols. 1 & 2.]

Moneys which are not strictly 'profits' of a business may yet be the 'income' of the tax-payer and the real question in cases of this nature is, whether the insurance moneys constitute 'income', and not whether these moneys are 'profits' of the assessee's business. The Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Newcastle Breweries (1) and Gliksten & Son, Limited v. Green (2), referred to [p. 866, col. 1.]

Where the interpretation clause of a Statute states that certain things are 'included' in a term, the term includes, unless the context otherwise requires, not Messrs. Geoffrey Lawrence, K. C. and Wilfred Barton, for the Appellant.

Messrs W. N. Tilly, K. C. (Canadian Bar) and J. W. Scobell Armstrong, for the Respondent.

Lord Blanesburgh.—This, by special leave, is an appeal from a judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada of the 13th May, 1931, whereby, in effect, judgment in favour of the plaintiff-appellant, pronounced at the trial by the Supreme Court of British Columbia and affirmed on the 7th October, 1930, by the Court of Appeal of the same Province, was discharged. The appellant now seeks to have these two earlier judgments restored.

The broad question for decision is whether certain moneys received by the respondents under use and occupancy policies insuring them against loss of profit resulting from the cessation of business consequential upon fire are liable, under the British Columbia Taxation Act, 1924, to be brought into account by them for assessment to income-tax.

This question has led, in these proceedings, to an acute difference of judicial opinion. The learned Judges of the Supreme Court unanimously favoured a negative answer to the question and their view had the support of Mr. Justice Martin in the Court of Appeal of the Province. On the other hand, the four remaining learned Judges of that court, supporting the learned trial Judge, were all in favour of the view that the moneys in question must be brought into account by the respondents for taxation purposes.

The respondents are a company incorporated under the Companies Act of British Columbia. Since 1921 they have been carrying on business at the city of Vancouver as manufacturers of and dealers in lumber and lumber products. On the 24th August, 1923, their plant and premises were destroyed in a conflagration. These subjects were insured against loss and damage by fire under annual policies, taken out or renewed in the previous March with some seventeen insurance companies. The respondents were also insured by the same companies against the further loss or damage they might sustain in the event of their plant either in whole or in part and for a period long or short being shut down or its working suspended in consequence of fire. These policies, the use and occupancy insurances already referred to, were separate from but complementary to the main policies. They insured the respondents in the total sum of $84,000 in respect of loss of "fixed charges" and $60,000 in respect of loss on "net profits." The nature of the liability so assumed by the insuring companies, with the character and quality of the payments made to the respondents in its discharge, is made sufficiently apparent by the definitions of the expressions, "fixed charges" and "net profits," contained in the policies themselves. "Fixed charges" are there defined to mean: "All the standing charges and expenses which must necessarily continue to be paid or incurred by the assured during the time the said plants shall be inoperative." "Net profits" are defined to mean "the net profits that would have accrued had there been no interruption of business caused by fire."

The annual premium upon the use and occupancy insurances amounted to $3,828.29. This premium had, in ordinary course, been brought into the accounts of the respondents as a revenue charge, and it is stated to have been allowed by the taxation authorities as a permissible deduction in the computation of the net income of the respondents for the purpose of income tax under the Taxation Act. This payment of premium out of revenue and its allowance as a disbursement are circumstances of importance in the case.

The loss payable under the main fire policies was, it would appear, separately adjusted with the Companies, was duly received by the respondents, and as to that receipt, admittedly a receipt on capital account, no question is raised. As to the claims of the respondents under the use and occupancy policies, the respondents and the adjuster of the insuring companies agreed that the period of interruption of the respondents' business was 215 business days, this being the length of time estimated to be required for the rebuilding of the plant, and the loss was adjusted on the following basis:—

Loss of net profits, estimated for $317.23 per day, and allowed at $200 per day	... $13,000.
Payment of fixed charges, estimated and allowed at $234.80 per day	... $52,427.90
Total	... $95,427.90

It is not disputed that as between the tax years 1923 and 1924 this sum is assessable to tax at all is properly apportionable as follows:—

1923—113 business days :
Net profits	... $22,600.00
Fixed charges	... $27,555.05
1924—102 business days :
Net profits	... $20,400.00
Fixed charges	... $24,872.85

The sum of $5,427.90 having been duly received, the respondents in their income tax returns to the Province for the year 1923 included the sum of $11,293.20 as an income receipt and in their return for the year 1924 they included as a similar receipt the sum of $3,106.80. In the result, provincial income-tax for the years 1923 and 1924 was in fact paid in respect of these sums aggregating $75,000 out of the total sum of $95,427.90 received as already stated.

The respondents did not bring into account for either year the balance—$20,427.90. Their view even then was that that sum was exempt from liability to tax for the reason that it represented moneys received from the insurance companies in excess of the actual loss sustained, the rebuilding of the plant having in fact taken a less number of days than that estimated for and allowed by the adjusters.

Now, with reference to these matters two things can at once be said. On the one hand, the $75,000 were brought in before any advice was taken, and it is agreed between the parties that the mere fact that income-tax was inadvertently paid by the respondents thereon is not to prejudice them to the extent to which in these proceedings it is not established that these moneys were liable to be brought into charge. On the other hand, it has not been contended by the respondents that any distinction in the matter of liability to tax can really be drawn between the $75,000 in respect of which its existence was originally assumed by them, and the balance of $20,427.90 in respect of which exemption was always claimed.

On the 28th November, 1927, the action out of which this appeal arises was commenced. There was a claim for arrears of personal property tax for interest and for penalties. But it soon emerged that there was no dispute between the parties with reference to the personal property tax. The claim which remained—not, it must be agreed, very clearly alleged—was originally, in effect, one for income tax, upon the balance figure of $20,427.90 already mentioned. At the trial, however, as a result of preliminary admissions of fact between the parties, it was found that, for special reasons which for the moment their Lordships pass by, the accountability of the respondents to income-tax in respect of the receipts representing fixed charges need not be further disputed, and that the real question, effective in result, was confined to the alleged liability of the respondents for income-tax in respect of "the loss of net profits" receipt, and it was agreed that, if it were held that the respondents were liable to income tax on that receipt the sum remaining recoverable in the action after all adjustments, was $3,922.86, any question of liability to penalties being held over. Thus it was that the learned trial Judge who held the respondents to be so accountable, entered judgment for the Crown in the sum stated. Thus also it was that in all the courts attention has been focussed on this one major issue, and it is with reference thereto alone that the judgments under review have been given.

The question whether this "loss of net profits" receipt is one which must be brought into calculation for the purpose of arriving in each of the tax years in question at the sum for which the respondents are assessable to Provincial income-tax must depend upon the provisions, properly construed, of the taxing Statute of the Province. But it will be convenient before these provisions are applied to that receipt to ascertain apart from any question as to income-tax its precise place and character in the economy of the respondents' business. And there is, it would appear, little difficulty in ascertaining this.

The main purpose of the respondents, as it is of all similar industrial units, is the acquisition of gain, such acquisition in the case of each unit being effected by the exercise of such of the powers conferred upon it by its constitution as it may determine to exercise. In the case of the respondents acquisition of gain was primarily to result from their carrying on of the business of manufacturers of and dealers in lumber and lumber products. In the conduct of that business they were exposed to the grave risk of fire, and the insurance of their premises and plant was an insurance against a possible capital loss dictated by every consideration of prudence. If the risk were not so guarded against, then by a fire sufficiently disastrous the whole operations of the respondents might, definitely be brought to a close and acquisition of gain for them definitely ended.

But such a fire, even if so far insured against, might still prove a hindrance more or less prolonged to the unbroken acquisition of gain from their business by reason of the fact that its continuance might not be possible during the period of reinstatement.

This insurance receipt therefore was the product of a revenue payment prudently made by the respondents to secure that the gains which might have been expected to accrue to them had there been no fire should not be lost, but should be replaced by a sum equivalent to their estimated amount.

Further, this was a receipt which had to be brought into the respondents' revenue account, so that it might enter into the calculation necessary to determine their profits available for dividend. It had been produced by a premium out of revenue, and therefore out of potential profits—a premium paid for the express purpose of ensuring in an event a sum in substitution for and the equivalent of net business profits over a defined period of time. All this is clear from the terms of the insurances themselves. Accordingly this insurance receipt was necessarily a revenue receipt of the business, which must not only have been brought into the respondents' revenue account, but if, for instance, it had happened that any of the stockholders were specially interested in the profits of a particular year, being, for example, non-cumulative preference stockholders, then the receipt must have been brought into credit proportionately for the years in which the profits represented would but for the stoppage presumably have been earned.

Finally, the receipt was one of which, as their Lordships think, it can be fairly said that it arose from the business of the respondents. The two English cases of The Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Newcastle Breweries (1), and J. Gliksten & Son, Limited v. Green (2) are authorities for this proposition. This receipt was inseparably connected with the ownership and conduct of the respondents' business. Had the respondents not been insured under their main fire policies, these particular use and occupancy policies would not have been available to them. As a result, the respondents have secured for themselves, a net receipt involving gain—an unusual mode of deriving gain from the business, it may be agreed, but, as Lord Warrington said in similar circumstances in the Newcastle Breweries case (1) not so divorced from the business as to prevent it entering the accounts as a receipt arising therefrom. And it was not a windfall. As observed by Sargant, L. J. in Gliksten's case (2) it was an ordinary receipt in the sense, not that it would occur every year or regularly at stated intervals, but in the sense that in the case of a business prudently conducted it would ordinarily be received so often as the risk insured against materialised.

This then as applied to the respondents' business is the nature of the receipt with reference to which the inquiry must now be made, whether under the Taxation Act, 1924, it is of a character to be brought into charge.

That Act is very lengthy, it consists of 200 sections, but its provisions relevant to the inquiry in hand are not numerous. Section 2 is an interpretation section. It places a meaning upon 28 expressions used in the Statute. In 13 instances the definitions which follow are said to be "included" in the term defined; in 15 instances the term defined is said to "mean that which follows."

The word "income" is in the former class, and their Lordships cannot doubt that in consequence the word, as used in the Statute, includes, unless the context otherwise requires, not only those things which the interpretation clause declares that it shall include, but such things as the word signifies according to its natural import. See Dilworth v. New Zealand Commissioner of Stamps (3). By s. 2, unless the context otherwise requires,

"income," amongst many other things, "includes" the gross amount "earned derived accrued or received from any source whatsoever, the product of capital labour industry or skill . . . and includes all income revenue rent interest or profits arising received gained acquired or accrued due . . . from real and personal property or from money lent deposited or invested or from any indebtedness secured by deed mortgage contract agreement or account or from any venture business or profession of any kind whatsoever."

"Person" includes corporations.

By s. 4 (1) it is provided that:—

"To the extent and in the manner provided in this Act and for the raising of a revenue for Provincial purposes—

(a) All property within the Province and all output and income of every person resident in the Province . . . shall be liable to taxation."

Part III of the Act relates to taxation of

(3) (1899) A. O. 99; 68 L. J. P. C. 1; 79 L. T. 473; 7 W. R. 337.

income, and certain classes of income are made exempt from taxation by s. 42.

Section 44 (1) is as follows:—

"The net income of every person shall be ascertained for the purposes of taxation by deducting from his gross income the exemptions provided in s. 42 . . . and all expenses incurred in the production of that part of his income which is liable to taxation . . . and the income-tax thereon payable to the Crown in right of the Dominion . . . but the following shall not in any case be allowed as expenses incurred in the production of income.

"(e) Any loss or expense recoverable under any insurance policy or contract of indemnity.

"48.—(1) A return of income as required by this Act shall be made by each taxpayer annually without any notice or demand and filed with the Assessor of the assessment district in which the income is liable to taxation. . . .

"(3) Where the return contains a statement of income derived from any business the taxpayer shall attach thereto a copy of his certified balance sheet and profit and loss account relating to that business for the period covered by the return.

"51. The tax on income shall be assessed levied and paid annually upon the net income of the taxpayer during the last preceding calendar year."

A reference to s. 44 (1) (i) and s. 48 (3) shows very clearly why in this case the receipt by the respondents in respect of "fixed charges" disappeared from the discussion. In their accounts for the purpose of arriving at their 'net income' the respondents were entitled to the benefit of a deduction for fixed charges as an expense: they were, however, required by s. 44 (1) (i) as against these lost fixed charges to bring in the fixed charges insurance receipt. The effect (the account being otherwise in credit) was necessarily to increase by the amount of that receipt the ultimate net income of the respondents.

Leaving therefore that item, the question is whether within the meaning of the Act the insurance receipt in respect of "loss of net profits" was also "income" to be brought into account so as to enter into the calculations for determining the "net income" of the business for income-tax purposes.

In view of the nature and origin of the receipt, as they have traced these, their Lordships have reached the conclusion that within the meaning even of the interpretation clause this receipt was 'income from a business' and that in ordinary parlance it was income or gain derived from the business of the respondents which had necessarily to be brought into receipt as such in the profit and loss account of the business referred to in s. 48 (3) of the Statute.

In effect, this was the view taken by the learned trial Judge and by the majority of the Court of Appeal of British Columbia. Mr. Justice Martin's dissenting view, although perhaps less clearly expressed, may be taken to coincide with that of the learned Judges of the Supreme Court, which was that the Statute nowhere provides for taxation of moneys paid by way of indemnity for profits not earned but irretrievably lost: that the moneys in question represented insurances placed by the respondents in order to meet the possibility of destruction by fire of its means of earning profits: that that event occurred, with the result that the respondents made no profit out of the property which could be taxed for the period in question; that there were therefore no profits to tax, and in the absence of clear language authorising such a course, there was no warrant for taxing money substituted for profits by way of indemnity for their loss.

Their Lordships feel that the true question at issue has not in this statement been really dealt with by the learned Judges of the Supreme Court. The real question was whether the insurance moneys in question constituted "income" of the respondents within the meaning of the Taxation Act, and not whether these moneys were "profits" of its business. Moneys which are not strictly "profits" of a business may yet be income of the taxpayer. But even on the question whether the moneys here could properly be described as "profits" the learned Judges do not seem to have referred to the reasoning of the House of Lords in Gliksten's case, (2) supra, which would appear to be in conflict with their own.

But however the receipt be described, it is because it is truly "income" of the respondents that it must be brought into charge in their revenue account for the purpose of arriving in respect of the year of charge at the respondents' net income. Whether the whole or any part of it is finally chargeable depends upon the result of the whole annual expenditure and revenue accounts of which it constitutes one item only.

For these reasons their Lordships find themselves in the result in agreement with the learned trial Judge. They are unable to concur in the conclusion of the Supreme Court. They think accordingly that this appeal should be allowed, and the judgment of the Court of Appeal of British Columbia restored. This will automatically revive the judgment of the learned trial Judge.

And their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

The Crown must have its costs before the Supreme Court, but in view of the observations of their Lordships upon this subject made on the application for special leave there will be no costs of this appeal.

Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act (IV of 1887), ss. 40 (a), 7—Keeping common gaming house—Search by Police—Finding of slips of paper with names of horses and sums of money—Presumption—How presumption rebutted—Panchnama—Evidentiary value—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 103 (1), (2).

The accused, a medical practitioner, was charged with keeping a common gaming house and thereby committing an offence under s. 4 (a) of the Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act. He was convicted on the evidence that on a Police raid of his dispensary some slips of paper with names of horses with sums of money marked against some of them were found. The Police could not find betting books of any sort.

Held, (i) that if a presumption arose from the evidence under s. 7 of the Act that the house or room was used as a common gaming house, then that presumption was rebutted by the fact that nothing was found in the house to suggest that it was being used as a common gaming house; [p. 869, col. 1.]

(ii) that the documents found in the house were perfectly consistent with the persons who were there, that is the accused, being merely engaged in making private bets for their own entertainment and the total absence of any books relating to book-making showed that no business of a common gaming house was being conducted. [ibid.]

Putting in panchnamas signed by panchas as part of the evidence of a Police Officer is worthless except to corroborate the evidence of the officer that panchas were employed and to show that the provisions of s. 103 (1) and (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code have been complied with. [p. 870, col. 1.]

Criminal Revision against the conviction and sentence passed by the Presidency Magistrate, Fourth Court, Bombay.

Mr. Sohrab R. Davar. (with him Mr. R. J. Thakor), for the Applicant.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

Beaumont, C. J.—These are two applications in revision against two convictions passed by the Presidency Magistrate, Fourth Court. In application No. 243 Dr. Lam was charged with keeping a common gaming house and thereby committing an offence punishable under s. 4 (a) of Bombay Act IV of 1887, and in the other case four persons who were in Dr. Lam's premises were charged with being found in a common gaming house and thereby committing offences under s. 5 of the said Act.

Now the evidence is of two kinds. In the first place there is the evidence of a witness named Chand Gulab who says that he was given by the Police a marked five rupee note and five marked rupee coins and that he went with that money to Dr. Lam's room and there made certain bets and that Dr. Lam took the marked money for the purpose of the bets. The learned Magistrate says that Chand Gulab is a reliable witness, and he accepts his story. But the difficulty I have in accepting the story is that as soon as he left Dr. Lam's premises he informed the Police of the bets there made, and the Police at once raided Dr. Lam's premises. It is quite clear from the evidence of Sergeant Taylor, who was the Police Officer in charge, that Dr. Lam and the other accused persons who were in Dr. Lam's premises were not anticipating a raid. Although no raid was expected the marked money was not found on the premises, and the conclusion I draw from that is that Chand Gulab did not effect bets with the ten rupees; if he had, they would certainly have been recovered when the Police raided the premises a few minutes afterwards. On his own showing Chand Gulab is not a person with a very high sense of honour, because he says that he had made bets previously with Dr. Lam (which Dr. Lam denies) although for the last two years he had been a member of the Anti-Gambling League. He probably thought that he could find a better use for the Rs. 10 which he had been lucky enough to obtain from Police than handing them over to Dr. Lam for the Police to recover. That is the only direct evidence of any betting. The other evidence is the result of the Police raid.

There were discovered in the premises of Dr. Lam various slips of paper on some of which were names said to be names of horses and on some certain sums of money were marked. The document on which the learned Government Pleader relies most strongly is Ex. G, which has the names of ten horses which were running at the Bombay races on that day, the day of the raid, and against the names of some of those horses in two columns of the slip headed respectively "W" and "P" were sums of Re. 140, from which I think one may infer that bets of Re. 1-4-0 had been made or were to be made on certain horses for a Win or a Place. But no betting books of any sort were found. The suggestion apparently is that Dr. Lam was carrying on a book-maker's business. If so, one would expect to find books with records of the bets made. The slips of paper which were found appear to me to be consistent with the view that Dr. Lam was interested in horse racing, as he says, and was making a note of bets which he proposed to make at the races, possibly for himself and his friends as well. But I see absolutely no evidence of anything in the nature of a betting business or of a book-maker's business being carried on by Dr. Lam or by the other accused who were in his rooms.

The way the learned Government Pleader puts the case is this. He says that under s. 3 of Bombay Act IV of 1887, that is to say, the Prevention of Gambling Act, "instruments of gaming" is defined as including amongst other things any document or record of any gaming, and "common gaming house" is defined as meaning "a house, room or place in which any instruments of gaming are kept or used for the profit or gain of the person owning, occupying, using or keeping such house, room or place" and the learned Government Pleader says that having discovered on the raid certain record of gaming transactions, that is to say, slips of paper with names of horses and sums of money upon them, a presumption arises under s. 7 of the Act that the house or room is used as a common gaming house. Well, if that presumption does arise from the mere finding in the house of a slip of paper with the names of horses and sums of money against them, I should say that the presumption is rebutted by the fact that nothing was found in the house which really suggests that it was being used as a common gaming house.

I do not propose to go in any detail through the evidence which has been analysed by the learned Magistrate, but the conclusion I come to is that the documents found in the house are perfectly consistent with the persons who were there, that is the accused, being merely engaged in making private bets for their own entertainment, and the total absence of any books relating to book-making shows that no business of a common gaming house was being conducted. That being so, I think that we must set aside the convictions.

There are two observations of a general character I desire to make in connection with this case. The first is that I cannot help thinking that the Police exercised their discretion unfortunately in launching this prosecution. It must, I think, have been apparent to Sergeant Taylor, who was in charge of the Police, when he found that his marked money was not in Dr. Lam's premises, that his witness Chand Gulab was not a very reliable person, and when he also found on the raid that there was no serious evidence of any gambling business being carried on at this house, I think he must have appreciated that, putting his case at the very highest, there had been a merely technical breach of the Prevention of Gambling Act. If there could be no more than a technical offence, it was, I think, unfortunate to take up the time of a Presidency Magistrate, a very busy man, and the time of this Court which is much in arrears with its work in dealing with such a case.

The other observation I desire to make is in connection with the panchnama which was put in. Sergeant Taylor in giving evidence says that he made a search of the premises of Dr. Lam in company of two panchas and he then puts in the panchnama signed by the panchas and apparently that panchnama was treated as being evidence that the panchas had agreed with the accuracy of Sergeant Taylor's evidence as to what he found on the search. Of course the panchnama is not evidence of anything of the sort. If a Police Officer conducts a search in company of panchas he may give evidence of that fact. He may say, "I searched the premises in company of two independent persons whose names were so and so". But if he desires that the evidence of the panchas is to be used to fortify his own evidence and show that his evidence as to the search is correct, then, he must call these panchas. He is not entitled to put in a signed panchnama and rely on that as evidence that the panchas agree with his evidence. If Sergeant Taylor's evidence had been challenged in this case as to the correctness of what he found on the premises, I should have thought that his evidence was open to this comment that there had been independent persons whom he could have called to supplement and fortify his evidence but whom he had neglected to call or ask the court to call. The learned Government Pleader says that in Bombay City the practice prevails of putting in these panchnamas as part of the evidence of the Police witnesses. That is a practice which does not prevail in the mofussil, in which the general practice is to call the panchas, and the same rules of evidence are applicable in Bombay City as in the mofussil. I desire to make it perfectly clear that in my opinion putting in panchnamas signed by panchas as part of the evidence of the Police Officer is worthless, except to corroborate the evidence of the officer that panchas were employed, and to show that the provisions of s. 103 (1) and (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code have been complied with. If the evidence of the panchas is sought to be relied upon, then the panchas must be called and the accused must have an opportunity of cross-examining them. To my mind the last words in s. 103 (2) do not negative this right.

The application in revision will in both cases be allowed and the accused will be discharged and the fines refunded and and the alleged instruments of gaming will be returned to the persons to whom they belonged.

Broomfield, J.—R. C. Lam, who is the principal accused in these two cases, is a Medical Practitioner, apparently of some standing, who has his consulting rooms and laboratory in the Raval Building in Lamington Road. It appears that Inspector Taylor, having received information from one Basdeo, a witness in the case, that Dr. Lam was using these premises for the purposes of a common gaming house, obtained a warrant under s. 6 of the Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act, and on the day in question, that is February 14, 1931, sent one Chand Gulab with some marked coins and a slip of paper containing the names of horses to the doctor's premises to lay a bet with him. Information having been given by Chand Gulab that the bet had been duly laid, the Police thereupon raided the premises, and certain articles which have been described by the learned Chief Justice, principally some scraps of paper containing the names of horses with in some cases figures against them, were found partly on the persons of other people present in the rooms and partly in Dr. Lam's waste paper basket and in a cupboard in one of his rooms.

The charge against Dr. Lam is under s. 4 (a) of the Act. No details have been given. He has been charged with and convicted simply of keeping a common gaming house. Similarly the charge on which the other accused have been convicted is simply that of gaming in a common gaming house. We understand, however, from the learned Government Pleader that the gist of the prosecution case is that Dr. Lam was in the habit of taking bets on horses running in the Bombay races and that he used his premises in Lamington Road for this purpose, also that the other accused were present on the occasion in question for the purpose of placing bets with him.

The evidence to substantiate these charges is partly direct and partly indirect. The direct evidence consists of the statements of the witnesses Basdeo and Chand Gulab, who state that on certain previous occasions they had visited the doctor at his quarters in Lamington Road and placed bets with him which were accepted. The witness Basdeo describes himself as a cotton broker, but he is also as he admits a professional Police informant. On two occasions he has himself been convicted of gambling. It has been alleged by Dr. Lam that there is personal enmity between him and this witness. That allegation can hardly be said to have been proved. But it has been proved that in a certain case No. 38 of 1929 in which this Basdeo was the complainant, the trying Magistrate came to the conclusion that he was a person utterly unworthy of credit who should not be believed upon his oath. I think, therefore under the circumstances, it would be quite unsafe to rely upon the evidence of Basdeo as a basis for convicting the accused.

The other witness Chand Gulab is in the service of an onion seller and has been for two years a member of the Anti-Gambling League, whatever that may be. It is not alleged that there is any personal animus on his part against any of the accused. But I agree with the learned Chief Justice that his evidence must be said to be completely discredited by reason of the fact that the marked coins, which he states he handed over to Dr. Lam a few minutes before the Police raid, were never found. It is also to be borne in mind that though he states that on two previous occasions he had placed bets with the accused, no record of those transactions has been discovered either. The prosecution case appears to be that Dr. Lam was in the habit of receiving bets, i. e., made a business of it, and it is difficult to see how such a business could have been carried on without some acknowledgment of the transactions being given to the punters and some record being kept by the book-maker himself.

The circumstantial evidence consisting of the finding of these slips of paper containing the names of the horses, etc., is obviously deprived of almost all its value once the evidence of Basdeo and Chand Gulab is not accepted. The articles found could be reasonably explained on the hypothesis that the accused and some of his friends were taking shares in tickets to be purchased by one or other of them on the totalisator. It is to be noted that the premises were raided on the morning of February, 14, the afternoon of that day being a race day. The Government Pleader argues that this is not the defence put forward by the accused themselves; but in the written statement of Dr. Lam we find this allegation: "On one occasion I was to meet a few friends at the course and we had decided to back a few horses in partnership on the 'tote', and this is how one of the old slips found from the cupboard bears the names of horses and the amounts I had backed on these horses in partnership with my friends."

As regards the presumption under s. 7 of the Act, on which reliance was placed by the learned Government Pleader, that presumption only arises when "instruments of gaming" are found "in any house, room or place entered under warrant." The definition of "instruments of gaming" contained in s. 3, as amended by s. 2 of Act VI of 1919, is extraordinarily wide, so wide that if the words were to be taken literally they would apparently include perfectly innocent articles, for instance, the mere record of private bets. It seems to follow that where the alleged instruments of gaming are of the character which we have in the present case, the presumption under s. 7 is one which requires very little evidence to rebut it. It is rebutted in this case in my opinion, by the failure to find any books of account or any evidence whatever to show that Dr. Lam was carrying on anything in the nature of a betting business in these premises.

I agree, therefore, that the convictions in each case should be set aside.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 26-C, 26-E, 26-F—Sale of occupancy—Pre-emption—Right of landlord to whom notice was not given—Exercise of right within reasonable time.

Section 26-F, Bengal Tenancy Act, gives the right of pre-emption not only to those landlords on whom notices have been issued but also to those on whom notices have not been issued under s. 26-C and 26-E, but who are landlords of the occupancy holding. In the case of the latter the right is to be exercised within a reasonable time of the knowledge of the sale. [p. 872, col. 2.]

Civil Revision against an order of the Munsif, Central Court, Dacca, dated the 6th September, 1930.

Mr. Hiralal Chakravarty, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Nripendra Chandra Das, for the Opposite Parties.

Judgment—The question which arises in this rule relates to the new provisions of s. 26 F, Bengal Tenancy Act, as amended by Act IV of 1928. This case illustrates one of the difficulties which arises in the working of the provisions of the Act. With great respect to the Legislature I think that it seems to have left much that ought to have been stated for clarifying the provisions of the Act. In this case it appears that an occupancy holding was sold in execution of a money decree and was purchased by the decree-holder. The decree-holder had notices served on some of the co-sharers landlords whom he named in the notices as contemplated by s. 26 E, cl. 4 of the amended Act. He issued notices on five of the tenure-holders who were the immediate landlords of the raiyyats whose occupancy holding had been sold by the compulsory sale. It is said that there are about 30 tenure holders who are the immediate landlords of the raiyyats. An application was made on 16th April 1930 by eight of the co sharers under s. 26 F, cl. (1), for exercising their right of pre-emption. They applied that the entire holding be transferred to themselves. Of these eight persons who applied under s. 26 F, two of them namely Prokash Kumar Mitra and Chandra Kumar Mitra were served with notices under s. 26 E, cl. (4), on 15th February 1930. The application of these two persons was filed evidently beyond the two months prescribed in s. 26 F, cl. (1). The other six persons who joined alleged that they had received no notices under s. 26 E, cl. (4) but they came to know of the sale in execution some time on 25th February 1930 and they joined in the application with Prokash Kumar Mitra and Chandra Kumar Mitra. The Munsif has thrown out the application on the preliminary ground that so far as Chandra Kumar and Prokash Kumar are concerned, the application is beyond two months and therefore not entertainable having regard to the provisions of s. 26 F cl. (1). He has also thrown out the application of the other six persons who alleged that they received no notices as their names do not appear in the notice under s. 26 E, cl. (4). A rule has been obtained in this Court at the instance of seven out of eight applicants, one of them having died without leaving any issue. The present Rule has been applied for not only at the instance of the applicants on whom notices were served but also on behalf of the rest.

It is said that one of the tenure-holders died and his heirs have been made parties to the present suit as petitioners. It is argued in support of this Rule that the Munsif has clearly acted without jurisdiction in refusing to entertain this application at the instance, at any rate, of those petitioners on whom notices were not served under s. 26 E, cl. (4). In order to consider the soundness of this contention, it is necessary to consider the scheme and policy of the amended provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It appears to me that it was intended by s. 26 F to give a right of pre-emption to the landlord of an occupancy holding in case of transfer of the occupancy holding either by private treaty or in execution sales in favour of persons who are strangers to the holding. That is the principle which is recognized undoubtedly by the provisions of that section. But certain limitations are provided as to the time during which this right must be exercised and it is said in that section that this right should be exercised within two months of the service of the notice under s. 26 O or s. 26 E. The Act does not make any provision with regard to cases where no notice has been issued on persons who claim to be the landlords of the occupancy holding which has been sold as contemplated by s. 26 O or s. 26 E. In such a state of things I think it would be right to construe the section as giving the right of pre-emption not only to those landlords on whom notices have been issued but also to those on whom notices have not been issued under s. 26 O or s. 26 E but who claimed to be the landlord of the occupancy holding—the right to be exercised within a reasonable time of the knowledge of the sale.

It cannot be contended that although the Legislature intended clearly by the provisions of s. 26 F to give a right of pre-emption to the landlord, it could only be exercised by persons who would be described in the notices served through the Collector as the landlords of the holding although in reality there may be persons other than those named in the notices who are co-sharers in the superior interest. This could not have been the intention of the Legislature. In those circumstances I think it is right to treat the application of the petitioners other than Chandra Kumar and Prokash Kumar as an application made under s. 26 F for the exercise of the right of pre-emption, they not being the tenure holders who are in any way bound by the limitation provided for in that section, namely that the right has to be exercised within two months of the service of notice issued under s. 26 O or s. 26 E. It is admitted that no notice has been served on them.

In these circumstances I think the Rule must be made absolute and the case be sent back to the Munsif in order that he may entertain the application and decide if there is any contention as to whether the present applicants except the applicants Prokash Kumar Mitra and Chandra Kumar Mitra are tenure holders and hold the superior interest either wholly or in part. If the Munsif comes to the conclusion that they are the immediate landlords of the occupancy holding he will grant their application and permit them to exercise the right of pre-emption as I understand the entire purchase-money has been deposited in pursuance of the provisions of s. 26 F, cl. (b). If on the other hand he decides that these persons are not co-sharer tenure-holders he will dismiss the application.

There will however be no order as to costs.

*Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), s. 27 (2)—
Application for discharge—Extension of time—
Creditors' right to apply.*

Section 27 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, authorises a Court to extend the time for an application for discharging an adjudicated insolvent even if an application for extension of time is made after the period specified for making the application for discharge has expired. Gopal Ram v. Magni Ram (2) and Palani Goundan v. Official Receiver, Coimbatore (3), followed. In re Ram Krishna Misra (1), distinguished. [p. 873, col. 2.]

It was not the intention of the framers of the Provincial Insolvency Act, that the debtor should derive advantage from his failure to apply for discharge. Therefore, an application to extend time for discharge made by a creditor should be granted if the annulment of the adjudication is calculated to prejudice the creditor. [ibid.]

Miscellaneous Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Ohhindwara, dated the 28th January 1930.

Mr. T. J. Kedar, for the Appellant

Mr. B. V. Pradhan, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—Sakharam presented an insolvency petition: he was declared an insolvent on the 17th July 1928 and was allowed six months' time to apply for a final discharge. Laduram, a creditor, asked that certain transfers made by the applicant should be annulled. While proceedings in this application were pending, Laduram, on the 9th January 1930, asked that the order of adjudication should be annulled on the ground that the debtor had not applied for an order of discharge within the period specified by the Court. The insolvent appeared and agreed that the order of adjudication should be annulled but Laduram discovering that the annulment of the order of adjudication would put an end to proceedings for annulling transfers, asked that the order of adjudication should remain in force.

The learned District Judge, without deciding whether he had power to extend the time fixed for the application of discharge, held that there was no reason for the exercise of that power and annulled the order of adjudication. Laduram, after obtaining the leave of this Court, has filed an appeal.

In In re Ram Krishna Misra (), Das and Ross, J.J., held that the provisions of (1) 88 Ind. Cas. 70; 4 Pat. 51; A. I. R. 1925 Pat. 355; 6 P. L. T. 776.

s. 43 of the Insolvency Act were mandatory and that the order of adjudication must be annulled if a debtor had not applied for an order of discharge within the period specified. But this decision was overruled by a Full Bench in Gopal Ram v. Magni Ram (2). A Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Palani Goundan v. Official Receiver, Coimbatore (3), approved of the Patna Full Bench decision. I agree with the reasoning in the Patna and Madras High Courts' Full Bench decisions and hold that s. 27 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act authorizes a Court to extend the time for an application for discharging an adjudicated insolvent even if an application for extension of time is made after the period specified for the application for the order of discharge has expired. The learned District Judge then had power to allow the application made by Laduram and to extend the period within which the debtor could apply for his discharge: in my opinion, there was good reason for the exercise of the power.

It is not material that the creditor had applied for annulment of the order of adjudication, as this application was made owing to misapprehension of its success and had been withdrawn. It seems obvious that it was not the intention of the framers of the Provincial Insolvency Act that the debtor should derive advantage from his failure to apply. I remark that in Palani Goundan v. Official Receiver, Coimbatore (3), the application to extend the time for the application for discharge was made by a creditor. Laduram will be prejudiced if he is unable to pursue his application for annulment of transfers. I, therefore, set aside the order of the District Judge and direct that the period within which the debtor should apply for discharge be extended up to a date which will allow of a decision on the application for annulment of transfers: costs in this Court will be borne by the respondent: Counsel's fee Rs. 40.

NURUL HASAN—APPELLANT

SK. IMAMBUX AND OTHERS—

RESPONDENTS.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92, Proviso 4—Registered deed of partnership for fixed term—Oral evidence to prove dissolution and payment of share before term—Admissibility.

When an oral agreement is made which in respect of the manner of payment rescinds or modifies a contract in writing and registered and any payment is made in accordance with that oral agreement, s. 92 of the Evidence Act does not exclude evidence of that payment or of the oral agreement that explains it. Therefore, it is open to a partner to adduce oral evidence to prove that a partnership which has been formed for a fixed period under a registered deed had, in spite of the term, been dissolved within that period and that he paid the share of the other partners. [p. 875, col. 1.]

[Case-law discussed.]

Second Appeal against the decree in O. A. No. 160 of 1928, in the Court of the District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 27th October 1928, in O. S. No. 200 of 1925, dated the 26th January, 1928.

Messrs. R. N. Padhye, and A. Razak, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. B. Kinkhede, R. B. and Messrs. V. R. Dhoke and A. R. Kulkarni, for the Respondents.

Judgment—In this case the plaintiff sued for dissolution of partnership and for rendition of accounts. It is admitted that the plaintiff and the defendants formed a partnership in 1921 to carry on the business of buying and selling oranges in Nagpur. Under the terms of the contract which were reduced to writing and registered the partnership was to continue for five years, that is, from 13th June, 1921, to 13th June, 1926. The defendants pleaded that as the partnership had resulted in loss it was dissolved in June, 1922, and a sum of Rs. 3,270 was paid to the plaintiff as his share of the partnership assets. This defence has succeeded in both of the lower Courts but the trial Court held that there had not been a complete accounting and passed a decree declaring that the partnership was dissolved from the 25th June 1922 and ordering that a Commissioner be appointed to examine the accounts of the partnership from 13th June, 1921, up to date; that decree has been upheld by the lower Appellate Court.

The main question that I have to consider in second appeal is whether the evidence adduced to prove the dissolution of partnership in June 1922 is admissible in view of proviso 4 to s. 92 of the Evidence Act, which prohibits evidence of a subsequent oral agreement to rescind or modify a contract that has been reduced to writing and registered. This point has been dealt with by the lower Appellate Court in para. 2 of its judgment, in which it is held that the evidence is admissible.

A number of rulings on the point have been cited before me by both sides: one of those relied on by the lower Appellate Court appears to me to have no relevance that is, Herambdev Dharnidhardav v. Kashinath Bhaskar (1). In that case there was a grant followed by a re-grant of property, and it was held that the two transactions were entirely distinct, and that proviso 4 to s. 92 had no applicability. Tan Chew Hoe Neo v. Chee Swee Cheng (2), is also not in point. In that case oral evidence was admitted to prove that joint tenants had become tenants in common because this involved no violation or contradiction of the terms of conveyance to the tenants. In Srinivasaswami Aiyangar v. Athmarama (3) it was held that proviso 4 to s. 92 precludes evidence of an oral agreement to rescind a registered contract or of conduct of the parties showing that such contract is non-existent. But the latter part of this decision is directly opposed to the decision in Shyama Charan Mandal v. Heras Mollah (4) in which evidence of conduct was admitted to prove that a lease was intended to be inoperative. The decision and also Khankar Abdur Rahman v. Ali Hafaz (5) followed a Full Bench decision in Preonath Shaha v. Madhu Sudan Bhuiya (6). In the latter two cases oral evidence of conduct was admitted to show that a document operated as a mortgage and not as a sale.

In Jagannath v. Shankar (7), it was held that oral evidence was inadmissible to prove that a smaller sum than what was due had been received in full satisfaction of the mortgage-debt. The correctness of that decision has been doubted in Sukhlal v.

Jetha (8), and it has been dissented from in Bhaba Sundari v. Ram Kamal (9), and Balasundara Naicker v. Ranganatha Iyer (10). In the latter two cases and in Mohim Chandra Dey v. Ramdayal Dutta (11), oral evidence has been held admissible to prove that a debt had been discharged partly by payment and partly by release of the debt. So also in Kattika Bapanamma v Kattika Krishnamma (12), in which a suit was brought on a registered deed agreeing to give maintenance, it was held that, though a subsequent oral agreement to give the plaintiff land to hold in lieu of maintenance was not provable, actual discharge of the claim by possession of the land could be proved. Mullappa v Matum Naga Chetty (13), and Sukhlal v. Jetha (8), do not really differ from the above cases. In both it was held that an agreement to take less than was due under a registered bond could not be proved; but it was not held that if payment had been made in pursuance of such agreement, that payment in full satisfaction could not be proved. The law is, I think, correctly stated in Sambhu v. Tikaram (14), which says that when an oral agreement is made, which in respect of the manner of payments rescinds or modifies a contract in writing and registered and any payment is made in accordance with that oral agreement, s. 92 of the Evidence Act does not exclude evidence of that payment or of the oral agreement that explains it.

My conclusion in the present case is that it was open to the defendants to adduce oral evidence to prove that the partnership had, in spite of the terms in the contract that it would continue for five years, been dissolved in June 1922 and that the plaintiff had been paid his share of the assets. As to the adequacy of that evidence I can say nothing in second appeal. It has been accepted by both the lower Courts and that concludes the matter. The decree of the trial Court will stand and this appeal is dismissed with costs.

Contract—Deposit in connection with illegal contract—Suit for recovery.

A deposit made in respect of an illegal contract can be recovered by a suit provided the plaintiff has not to rely on such contract in support of his claim.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Ohhindwara, dated the 26th November 1928, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Ohhindwara, dated the 9th January 1928.

Mr. R. N. Padhye, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. R. Trivedi, for the Respondent.

Judgment—The plaintiffs sued for return of a deposit of Rs. 1,000: the deposit was made in a village of the Ohhindwara District. A document (Ex. D-1) states that the amount was to remain in deposit for three years and was then to be repaid or credited towards the price of coal.

The defendant urged that the suit filed before the expiry of three years was premature, but at the same time he urged that the object of the deposit was to secure him from loss in dealing with the plaintiffs, that these dealings ceased and that he had already brought a suit for recovery of the money due on these dealings.

In view of these admissions the plaintiffs' plea that it was understood at the time the deposit was made that it would be returned when the dealings stopped must, I think, succeed. The suit then was not premature.

In the lower Courts it was urged that the Ohhindwara Court had no jurisdiction: that was not urged before me and admittedly the deposit was made in the Ohhindwara District: the cause of action, in part, arose in the Ohhindwara District.

The defence which has succeeded in the lower Appellate Court is that the suit cannot succeed because the contract with regard to coal was opposed to public policy. I have not been referred to any case in which this maxim has been applied to prevent recovery of a deposit as security merely on the ground that such security facilitated the carrying out of an illegal contract. In Broom's Legal Maxims at page 562 it is stated:—

connection with an illegal transaction can be recovered in a court of justice, is to ascertain whether the plaintiff, in support of his case, or as part of the cause of action, necessarily relies upon the illegal transaction: if he requires aid from the illegal transaction to establish his case, the Court will not entertain his claim."

In the present case it was the defendant who urged that there had been an illegal transaction and that the result of this transaction was that he was entitled to retain the Rs. 1,000 on account of the price of coal. I do not think that the terms of Ex. D-1 made it necessary for the plaintiffs to allege and prove that they had obtained coal and paid for it. The plaintiffs could clearly succeed without mention of the fact that any transaction regarding coal had taken place. To show that the suit was not premature he had only to state that he had not had dealings with the defendant for some time before institution. I add that there is a finding of fact that nothing was due to the defendant on account of coal.

The case of course would have been very different if the Rs. 1,000 had been paid as an advance payment for coal. I am, therefore, of opinion that though the contract regarding coal has been found to be illegal, the plaintiffs are entitled to recover their deposit made on the understanding that it should remain as a deposit until all the dealings under the illegal contract were completed. I, therefore, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore the decree of the first court: costs in all courts will be borne by the defendant.

C. P. Tenancy Act (I of 1920), s. 6 (5)—Mortgage of absolute occupancy—Pre-emption by malguzar—Suit to enforce mortgage—Liability of pre-empted property.

Under s. 6 (5) of the C. P. Tenancy Act, 1920, when the proprietor exercises his right of pre-emption and deposits the amount which has been fixed by the Revenue Officer as the value of the land free from incumbrances, the mortgage-debt becomes a charge on the purchase-money in exoneration of the lien. And in a suit brought on the basis of the mortgage, such pre-empted land must be excluded when the mortgaged property is brought to sale. Mahadeo v. Zingru (1), relied on.

First Appeal against the decision in O. S. No. 83 28 passed by the Subordinate Judge, First Olase, Khandwa, dated the 27 March, 1930.

Mr. S. B. Gokhale, for the Appellants.

Mr. W. R. Puranik, for the Respondents.

Judgment—Defendants Nos. 1 to 4 had in 1916 executed a mortgage in favour of the plaintiffs and among the property mortgaged were certain absolute occupancy fields with Jamunia. Subsequent to this mortgage defendant No. 5, Dewaji in execution of a simple money decree against the defendants had part of this mortgage property brought to sale in the civil court. Defendants Nos. 6 to 8 who are co-malguzars of the village (Defendant No. 6 Irshadali the Lambardar at the time of the mortgage), and defendants Nos. 9 to 11 who are also co-malguzars of the village exercised their right of pre-emption under s. 6 of the Tenancy Act of 1920 and defendants Nos. 6 to 8 in exercise of their right purchased the half-share of the absolute occupancy field No. 256 for which they paid Rs. 840 and defendants Nos. 9 to 11 purchased half of the absolute occupancy field No. 264 for which they paid Rs. 512. All these defendants including Dewaji have been made parties to the suit, Dewaji because the plaintiffs alleged he has acquired mortgage lien over the money which Dewaji received from the pre-emptors and the pre-emptors themselves as being in possession of the mortgage property. The mortgagors defended the suit on various grounds which need not be considered. Their contentions failed and they have not appealed against the decision. In the course of the judgment, however, the lower Court found that both sets of pre-emptors were bound by the mortgage and were not entitled to release as they claimed, but were only entitled to redeem. In respect of defendant No. 5 the finding is contained in para. 32 of the judgment. "The plaintiffs can follow the mortgage property for their mortgage-debt. The property is still in existence. Defendant No. 5 has received money for the property that has passed out of his hands. This property he had purchased subject to the plaintiff's mortgage lien. In case the property is not available, the defendant No. 5 is liable to pay the mortgage-debt out of the money received by him in exchange of the property. The plaintiffs have thus got a lien over the money received by the defendant No. 5."

Both sets of the pre-emptors have filed separate appeals. They were represented by the same Pleader. The appeals were heard together and this judgment will cover them both. The grounds of appeal were that the mortgage of 1916 was not binding on the pre-emptors, that they were not the representatives of the tenant mortgagors and the equity of redemption did not vest in them and that after the pre-emption any mortgage lien on the property was transferred to the purchase money which they had deposited in the Revenue Court.

The appeals must succeed. The relevant portions of the judgment against the appellants run as follows:—

"Defendants Nos. 6 to 8 have purchased the property on payment of the amount fixed for pre-emption by the Revenue Officer. The property was in possession of the defendant No. 5 who purchased it in auction subject to the mortgage of the plaintiff. The mortgage of the field was effected in 1916. It was voidable at the option of the malguzars. They did not exercise their right till 1926. I don't think they can impeach the mortgage now. It was not a mortgage with possession. No third person has come into possession of the property in pursuance of the mortgage. Defendants Nos. 6 to 8 have come into possession of the property under their right of pre-emption from a person who purchased the property subject to the plaintiff's mortgage. I should think that the mortgage deed sued upon is binding on the defendants Nos. 6 to 8 and I decide the Issue No. 4 accordingly. Defendants Nos. 9 to 11 have not shown how they are not liable to redeem the mortgage. They are liable to redeem the mortgage like defendants Nos. 6 to 8."

With respect to the remark that the mortgage was voidable as against the malguzars in 1916 and that they are debarred from impeaching the mortgage now since they have made no claim in respect of it for 10 years, the plaintiffs have not shown that the landlord's right to avoid the mortgage under s. 41 of the Tenancy Act of 1898 has ceased to exist; it is assumed that it was so since the landlords had not exercised their right for 10 years. The landlords have, however, pleaded lack of notice of the mortgage, that the mortgage was not one with possession and the mortgagee had taken no steps during these years to enforce his lien and the plaintiffs have not shown that the proprietors had any notice whatsoever of the mortgage. If a proprietor has notice of a mortgage of absolute occupancy holding he is put on his election whether he will pre-empt or not immediately. But the fact that they had not received any notice and consequently had taken no action for 10 years cannot cause their right to lapse. They can still claim that the mortgage is void as against them. But apart from the considerations which arise under the Tenancy Act of 1898, the appeal must succeed by virtue of the provisions of s. 6, sub-s. (5) of the Tenancy Act of 1920. It is clear that when the proprietor exercises his right of pre-emption and deposits the amount which has been fixed by the Revenue Officer as the value of the land free from incumbrances, the mortgage-debt becomes a charge on the purchase money in exoneration of the lien. This provision of the law appears to have been entirely overlooked by the learned Subordinate Judge. The sum obtained at the auction-sale by Dewaji was with full knowledge of the mortgage lien subsisting on the land. He had the land sold at the full value irrespective of any incumbrances, that is to say, far more than the land would have fetched if sold, had not the proprietors exercised their right of pre-emption. The proprietors in purchasing the land have also paid the full value clear from incumbrances. It is by the simplest process of reasoning clear that the mortgage lien passes on to the purchase money and that the land becomes entirely exempt from it.

The respondents in appeal could advance no better argument than that the exoneration of the lien from the mortgage is limited to the fixation of the price alone and that the purchaser is bound to see that the money deposited reached the mortgagee and that otherwise the lien subsists on the land. There is no provision to that effect in the Tenancy Act nor is there in existence so far as I am aware, any proposition of law to that effect. It is further contended that in respect of s. 41 of the Tenancy Act of 1898 the malguzar is bound to get a declaration that the mortgage was voidable as against him and as he failed to do so within the statutory period of six years he is unable to impeach the mortgage now. This argument is equally invalid since no proof has been brought forward that the malguzar had any knowledge of the mortgage at all. It is perfectly clear from the terms of s. 6 (5) of the O. P. Tenancy Act of 1920 that if any mortgage lien on an absolute occupancy holding is transferred from the holding to the purchase money the malguzar pre-empt and that in any suit brought on the basis of a mortgage, such pre-empted land must be excluded when the mortgaged property is brought to sale vide Mahadeo v. Zingru (1).

The appeal succeeded and the decree of the lower Court will be modified by excluding from the description of the mortgaged property which is to be brought to sale half share in the fields No. 259 and 264 in the possession of Irshad Ali, Abidali and Faridunnisa and Thakur, Onker and Narayan respectively. I would not hold that the claim by the latter appellants was made in respect of a half share of field No. 295-1 as well. The field as correctly pointed out by the Pleader for the respondent was not claimed by these appellants as having been purchased by them and it is admitted on their behalf that the inclusion of this field is a mistake. The respondents will pay the appellants' costs in this Court and their costs in the court below. There will be only one set of Pleader's fee in this court.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 202—"Interest in goods," meaning of—Agent for sale of goods entitled to retain price as remuneration, interest of.

An agent for sale of goods who is entitled to retain part of the sale-proceeds in lieu of his remuneration is not a person who has an interest in the goods within the meaning of s. 202, Contract Act. Vishnucharya v. Ramchandra (1) and Lakhmichand v. Chotooram (2), followed.

First Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Chhindwara, dated the 25th February 1930.

Messrs. D. T. Mangalmoorti, A. V. Vazalwar, and N. T. Mangalmoorti, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. R. Bobde for the Respondent.

Judgment—The plaintiff, on the 12th February 1926, appointed the defendants as his agents for the sale of cloth. The defendants were to account to the plaintiff for the cloth sold at the rates prevailing in Bombay and were entitled to keep for themselves any excess over those rates that they might secure from purchasers. The other terms of the contract are given in the two documents, dated the 12th February 1926, Ex P-2, executed by defendant No. 1 and Ex. D-1 executed by the plaintiff. The rent of the shop in which the defendants were to carry on their trade in cloth and the salary of one servant were to be paid by the plaintiff, and it was stipulated that, if the stock of cloth fell below Rs. 2,000 in value, the plaintiff would no longer be liable for the rent or the pay of the servant. The plaintiff supplied the defendants with cloth of Rs. 6,008-9-0 on the 23rd February, 1926. Between that date and the 17th October, 1926, the defendants sold cloth worth Rs. 989 9-0 at Bombay rates and paid that sum to the plaintiff. On the 31st October, 1926, the plaintiff served them with a notice (Ex. P-3), terminating the agency and requiring the defendants, within eight days, to return the cloth remaining unsold and account for the cloth sold and intimating that his liability for rent and the pay of a servant would cease from the end of the month. In their reply (Ex. P-7) the defendants promised to comply within a fortnight. In reply to a second notice (Ex. P-5), dated the 8th November, 1926, the defendants (Ex. P-8) denied their liability to return the cloth or to account and claimed that the plaintiff was liable to them for damages. Further notices from the plaintiff received no reply and on the 13th December, 1928, he filed the suit out of which this appeal arises, in which he has been given a decree for the delivery of cloth worth Rs. 4,545-10-0 and the payment of Rs. 1,447-9-3 in cash or, if the cloth is not delivered, for the payment of Rs. 5,593-3-3.

It is the first ground of appeal on behalf of the defendants that the term relating to the payment of rent and the servant's salary really meant that the contract was to terminate when the plaintiff had not goods of the value of Rs. 2,000 to supply to the defendants and that the lower court is wrong in holding that it meant that the contract was to terminate when the stock of the plaintiff's cloth in the defendants' hands fell below that value. There has been confusion in the use of pronouns in the two documents; but I consider that the lower Court is correct in thinking that the stipulation relates to the value of the stock in the defendants' hands. As I read the stipulation, however, it is not concerned with the termination of the contract but simply with the plaintiff's liability to pay the rent of the shop and the salary of one servant. There is, in fact, no term in the contract providing for the termination of it. It is entirely indefinite as to the time for which the agency was to continue, and the defendants cannot plead that, as they displayed, in selling the plaintiff's cloth the skill and diligence required by s. 219 of the Contract Act, it is the plaintiff who is liable to compensate them under s. 205 of the Act for revoking the agency without sufficient cause. The plaintiff was entitled, under s. 203, to revoke the authority, given by him to the defendants, without any cause, unless s. 202 of the Act applies, that is, unless the defendants had an interest in the property which forms the subject-matter of the agency.

It is urged on behalf of the defendants that they had an interest in the cloth supplied to them by the plaintiff for sale, because they were entitled to keep for themselves any amount obtained by them above the Bombay rates. They rely upon illustration (a) to s. 202 of the Contract Act, which runs as follows:—

"A gives authority to B to sell A's land, and to pay himself, out of the proceeds, the debts due to him from A. A cannot revoke this authority, nor can it be terminated by his insanity or death."

For the plaintiff, Vishnucharya v Ramchandra (1), has been cited, in which it has been held that an agent for the collection of rents cannot be regarded as having an interest in the property merely because he is authorized to take his salary out of the rents. It is objected on behalf of the defendants that this decision runs directly contrary to illustration (a) to s. 202. But I find that a similar view has been taken in Lakimchand v. Chotooram (2), in which the facts more closely resemble those of the present case and it was held that the interest which an agent has in effecting a sale and the prospect of remuneration to arise therefrom is not such an interest as would prevent the termination of the agency.

I am in respectful agreement with the decisions in these two Bombay cases. They and the case before me are clearly distinguishable from the case stated in illustration (a) to s. 202 of the Contract Act. In the illustration, the principal was under a liability to the agent quite apart from the contract of agency, and the authority given to him to sell the principal's land was by way of security for the discharge of that liability. In the present case, the agent had no interest in the property to be sold or in the sale proceeds thereof until a sale had been actually effected, and revocation of the agency, before sale had been effected, deprived him of nothing that had accrued to him.

I hold that the plaintiff was entitled to revoke the agency of the defendants and did revoke it by the notice (Ex. P-3), dated the 30th October, 1926, and that the defendants are clearly liable to pay him damages for their failure to return the cloth that still remained in stock with them and to pay the plaintiff the sum received by them by the sale of cloth subsequent to revocation. The lower Court has allowed damages at the rate of 1 per cent. per mensem on the value of the cloth unsold and retained by the defendants. I consider that the lower Court's award is fair. P. P. Deo, Receiver of the Estate of Balkrishna Koshti v. Narayan (3) has no application to the present case, as it is not one in which interest has been claimed on money due of which payment has been withheld. The withholding of goods is quite a different matter.

- (1) 5 B. 253.
(2) 24 B. 403.

There is a cross appeal by the plaintiff (First Appeal No. 120 of 1930). There are two grounds of appeal the first of which, I am informed, has been set up under a misapprehension. The second objects to the lower Court's allowance of interest at the low rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the suit till realization; but it seems to me that this rate is adequate.

Both appeals are dismissed with costs.

Vendor and purchaser—Pre-emption—Covenant of title by vendor in favour of vendee—Pre-emptor coming into shoes of vendee—Defect in title—Pre-emptor's suit for damages as against vendor, whether competent.

A pre-emptor is entitled to enforce a covenant running with the title against the vendor. Therefore, the vendor is as much liable to the pre-emptor as to his vendee for breach of warranty of title and a suit for damages for defect of title is competent by a pre-emptor against the vendor.

[Case law referred to]

Second Appeal against the decree of the District Judge Buldana, in O. A. No. 53 of 1928, dated the 21st February, 1930.

Messrs A. V. Khare, and W. B. Pendharkar, for the Appellants.

Messrs. G. G. Hatwalne, and M. D. Khandekar, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of Rs. 2,000 as damages for breach of a covenant for title. Kisan Tukaram, who was a defendant No. 2 in the first court and is respondent No. 1 here, had executed a sale deed on 5th February, 1923, in favour of defendant No. 1 (respondent No. 2) Nathu Akaji in respect of field No. 162 for Rs. 1,500. The appellants who were plaintiffs in the lower court brought a suit for pre-emption and obtained a decree against Nathu Akaji in Civil Suit No. 57 of 1924. They deposited Rs. 1,500 on 30th October, 1924 for payment to Nathu Akaji who withdrew the sum on 21st July, 1925. Then the plaintiffs discovered that there was a decree for sale already passed in respect of the field in Civil Suit No. 240 of 1921 on the basis of the mortgage. In execution of the decree in that suit the pre-empted field was sold. The plaintiffs consequently filed the suit out of which this appeal arises for recovery of damages. The trial Court decreed the plaintiffs' claim against Kisan only. In appeal it was held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to any relief of compensation for the breach of the covenant of title for the reason that the pre-emption was not a voluntary sale.

It is contended for the appellants that a pre-emption sale could not be regarded as a compulsory sale. I have, therefore, to determine in the first instance whether pre-emption sale is a voluntary or a compulsory sale. A compulsory sale is defined as a sale which is forced upon an unwilling vendor and in which neither the purchaser is a man of his choice, nor the terms of the sale including the price are fixed by any contract with him, the sale being ordered by court conducted by its officer and subject to its approval before being treated as final. See Tagore Law Lectures, 1913, page 4. The sales such as those for public purposes under the Land Acquisition Act, those in execution of decrees or those made to equalise a partition or those made for recovery of arrears of revenue, rent or some public demands, can certainly be characterised as involuntary or compulsory sales. A voluntary sale on the other hand is a transfer effected by the owner of the property with his free consent in favour of another person chosen by himself and on terms mutually agreed, the price being immediately paid or promised or part paid and part promised: see ibid page 1. Whether pre-emption sale is voluntary or compulsory depends upon whether the vendor is free to sell or not to sell.

The sales can be broadly divided into four classes as follows: (1) sales by private treaty, (2) conveyances executed by the court to give effect to the agreement of sale by way of specific relief, (3) pre-emption sales (4) judicial sales including those under the Land Acquisition Act. In the case of the first three classes of sales there is one common element, it is that the vendor has full freedom to sell or not to sell before he either enters into a contract for sale or executes the actual conveyance. There is no outside pressure operating on the will of the vendor to leave him an alternative but to sell. In cases of specific relief the court simply carries out the terms of a contract to which the vendor was a willing party. Similarly in passing a pre-emption decree the court deals with a transaction which when it took place was purely voluntary. Neither the pre-emptor nor the court has any right or power to compel the vendor to sell the property. The pre-emptor's right arises only when the vendor sells of his own free will. The difference between a conveyance executed by way of specific relief and the pre-emption decree lies only in the vendor's choice of the vendee, but in both cases the vendor has full discretion either to sell or not to sell and has freedom to fix his own price. It would, therefore, appear that the right of pre-emption is exercised in respect of a voluntary sale. In other words it is nothing but a culmination of the voluntary sale. As was observed in Gobind Dayal v Inayatullah (1):

"It is simply a right of substitution, entitling the pre-emptor, by reason of a legal incident to which the sale itself was subject, to stand in the shoes of the vendee in respect of all the rights and obligations arising from the sale under which he has derived his title. It is, in effect, as if in sale-deed the vendee's name were rubbed out and the pre-emptor's name inserted in its place."

The view enunciated here that right of pre-emption is simply a right of substitution and not a right of re-purchase was accepted by this Court in Raijat v. Irbhan (2). It is therefore evident that the pre-emption sale is in reality a voluntary sale. The learned Tagore Law Lecturer of 1913 also characterises a pre-emption sale to be a voluntary sale. He observes as follows:—

"The sale is not forced upon an unwilling vendor; indeed the price and the terms are determined by a contract with whom it is merely a substitution of one purchaser for another:—"

- (1) 7 A. 775 at p. 809; A. W. N. (1885) 228.
- (2) 3 Ind. Cas. 923; 5 N. L. R. 136 at p. 142.

"Pre-emption confers an option to purchase a property in preference to others whenever its owner desires to sell it and of taking it from such of the latter as may have bought it. The person so entitled cannot compel the owner to sell the property but must wait until the latter is minded to part or has parted with the property, to put his option in motion."

(See Agarwala's Law of Pre-emption, page 1)

Now the next question is whether in cases of pre-emption sales there is no implied warranty of title within the meaning of s. 55 (2), Transfer of Property Act. It is urged for the respondents that the Transfer of property Act does not apply to pre-emption sales on the strength of a passage found at page 21, Vol I, Gour's Law of Property, wherein it is said that the provisions of Transfer of Property Act do not apply to a transfer in invitum as for example transfers in execution of a decree, sales under insolvency, pre-emption etc. It appears to me that these observations are true in so far as the formalities provided for in the Transfer of Property Act are concerned.

It may be illustrated by a case like this. If a Muhammadan were to orally sell property worth above Rs. 109 and deliver possession of the property to the vendee, such a sale would be invalid under the Transfer of Property Act, but it would not on that account fail to give rise to a right of pre-emption: see Abdulla v. Ismail (3), Janki v. Giridat (4), Madho Bharti v. Bharti Singh (5) and Begam v. Muhammad Yakub (6). It is in this sense that the Transfer of Property Act does not apply to a case of pre-emption. The respondents' learned Counsel relies on Banti v. Mandu (7) and argues that there is no warranty of title implied in favour of the pre-emptor. That case has obviously no application inasmuch as the court was considering the covenant of indemnity and not a warranty of title. In that case the sale-deed in respect of which a decree for pre-emption was granted contained a covenant by the vendor that if the are a owned by him in the land sold was found to be less than was stated in the deed, he would make good the deficiency out of some other land belonging to him. It was rightly held that that covenant was one of indemnity. In such a personal agreement between the vendor and the vendee the pre-emptor could have no right to enforce. In fact this decision can be quoted against the respondents. Their Lordships' undermentioned observations made the position clear:—

"In my opinion a covenant running with the land is to be distinguished from a personal covenant such as a covenant of indemnity entered into by the vendor in favour of the vendee. While the pre-emptor may be entitled to enforce the covenants running with the land he is not entitled to the same right with regard to a covenant of indemnity which is deemed to be a personal covenant."

Section 55, sub-s. 2, Transfer of Property Act, runs as follows:—

"The seller shall be deemed to contract with the buyer that the interest which the seller professes to transfer to the buyer subsists, and that he has power to transfer the same... The benefit of the contract mentioned in this rule shall be annexed to, and shall go with the interest of the transferee as such, and may be enforced by every person in whom that interest is for the whole or any part thereof from time to time vested."

It is clear from this provision that the implied covenant for title is one which runs with the land Bapu v. Kashiram (8) and is, therefore, enforceable by the pre-emptor in whom vests the property Hanwant Rai v. Chandi Prasad (9). The contract of indemnity is only personal and does not run with the land. Since the covenant of title runs with the land, the pre-emptor has as much right to enforce the covenant and claim compensation for breach thereof as any vendee under a sale by private treaty. It appears to me that in all kinds of sales except the compulsory sale, there is an implied warranty of title since the vendee purchases the property and not merely the right, title and interest of the vendor. The principle that the seller is liable to the pre-emptor for breach of an implied warranty of title was recognised by the Muslim jurists: see Hamilton's Hedaya, page 557 quoted by Mr. Agarwala at page 200. In cases of judicial sales there can be no warranty of title because the court sells the property attached while it is in possession of the judgment-debtor without determining the title. As their Lordships observed in Dorab Ally Khan v. The Executors of Khajah Moheed-deen (10), the execution-purchaser has no remedy against either the Sheriff or the judgment-debtor because the Sheriff is authorised by the writ to seize the property of the execution-debtor which lies within his territorial jurisdiction, and to pass the debtor's title to it without warranting that title to be good.

It is next contended that the appellants are not entitled to sue for compensation unless they had paid off the mortgage debt. Reliance is placed on Bhagwati v. Banarsi Das (11), Nathu Khan v. Thakur Burtonath Singh (12) and 55 Ind. Cas. 152 Keshrimal v. Kadhai (13). These cases lend no assistance because they do not lay down that the vendee who has purchased property subject to encumbrances without notice of such encumbrance is bound to discharge it as a condition precedent to the claim for damages. It may be conceded that if they had paid off the mortgage debt they would have been entitled to be reimbursed. It does not however follow that their failure to redeem the mortgage of which they had no notice would deprive them of their right to claim refund of their purchase money. In the present case there was no opportunity for redeeming the mortgage debt because the decree had already been passed. Their failure in execution to bid at the auction and purchase the property for which they had paid full consideration already cannot deprive them of their claim for damages. The suit is one substantially for compensation for failure of consideration. The argument therefore has no force.

Nathu, the vendee, cannot be compelled to pay back to the pre-emptor since he has received no benefit and he is, therefore, liable to the pre-emptor.

For the reasons aforesaid I allow the appeal and restore the first court's decree passed against Kisan. The respondent No 1 will pay the appellants' costs incurred in this court and the courts below.

The appellants will pay the costs of the respondent in all courts.

O. P. Land Revenue Act (II of 1917), s. 203, scope of—Abadi—Erection of substantial building—Right to transfer site.

Clause 5 is governed by the general sub-s. (8). [p. 883, cols. 1 & 2]

A license to occupy a village site cannot carry with it a right to transfer the site with permission to occupy unless such permission is proved and the fact that the licensee has built a substantial building on the site would not preclude the malguzar from ejecting a person to whom the licensee has transferred the site. Bhondusao v. Jagat Ram (2), distinguished. Narayan v. Behari (1), referred to. [p. 883, col. 2.]

Messrs. M. R. Bobde and S. B. Gokhale for the Appellant.

Mr. J. Sen, for the Respondents.

Judgment — Musammam Kamodi, a non-agriculturist, was the owner of two houses contiguous to each other in Mouza Sodalapur. These were brought to sale in execution of a civil court decree and were brought by one Ramratan who subsequently died and is now represented by his widow and others. The malguzar of the village, Madhorao, claimed possession of the site and as the defendants refused to vacate he brought a suit for possession. The defendants resisted the claim on the ground that as Musammam Kamodi was a non-agriculturist she had a right to transfer the houses with their sites. The plaintiff denied that the site could be transferred by her and an issue was framed. "Is the site in suit capable of being transferred with the houses as alleged?" No evidence was led in the case and the only document filed beyond postal receipts is a copy of the wajib-ul-arz which is of no assistance in the case as it does not more than repeat the first three sub-sections of s. 203 of the O. P. Land Revenue Act. The trial court decreed the plaintiff's claim on the strength of the ruling in Narayan v. Behari (1), holding that the transferee has the same right as the transferor provided no objection is raised by the malguzar and that in this case there was an objection and that in the absence of any contract to the contrary the malguzar has a right to eject the transferee who is in possession of the site in the village abadi without obtaining his consent. The defendants appealed claiming that the provisions of the Land Revenue Act were not applicable in the case and that Musammam Kamodi had full rights of ownership over the house and the site and consequently a transferable right therein irrespective of the malguzar's consent. The lower Appellate Court, while holding that the site undoubtedly did belong to the landlord, considered that the question raised is not one of ownership but is whether the landlord is entitled to enter into possession. Although the judgment is not very clear on the point, it appears that the learned District Judge, relied on the decision in Bhandusao v. Jagat Ram (2), and held that on the facts of the case the landlord was not entitled to revoke the license in which it was presumed that he must have given consent to the construction of these houses as the large one was a substantial house built of bricks; the smaller house is partially in ruins. The decree of the lower Court was set aside and the suit was dismissed. The malguzar Madhorao has preferred this second appeal.

The ruling in Bhandusao v. Jagat Ram (2) has really no applicability to the present case. In that case one of two neighbours in an abadi sold a smaller strip of land from his site to the other and the malguzar claimed possession of the strip. The question as to whether ownership passed as a result of the alleged sale of this strip was expressly left undecided and it was held that the infringement if any of the malguzar's right in consequence of this transfer was not sufficient to entitle him to possession of the strip transferred as the tenant vendor had a substantial house adjacent to the strip and the presumption was that he had obtained the malguzar's consent to the building of it. The parties in the case were non-agriculturists.

Section 203 of the Land Revenue Act is not confined to the rights of agricultural house-holders only; their rights and liabilities are determined by the first three subclauses of the section and house-holders in general are governed by the remaining sub-clauses. By sub cl. (5) the Financial Commissioner (now the Local Government) may declare in any village that the rights of non agricultural house holders in sites are to be heritable and transferable. No such declaration has been made in respect of this village. The sub section, however, is governed by the general sub-s. (8) which says that nothing in the section shall affect the terms of any contract between the proprietor and the holder of a site in the abadi. Musammam Kamodi or her heirs must be presumed to have occupied the site in question by virtue of a contract either express or implied. No evidence has been led 'by either' side to show what this contract was and it cannot be presumed to be more than a license to occupy. It will not be revoked as far as Musammam Kamodi or her heirs are concerned; but this license cannot carry with it a right to transfer with permission to occupy unless such permission is proved. The right to transfer a site is an incident of ownership of the site which Musammam Kamodi admittedly never had. The effect of the decision of the lower Appellate Court would be to destroy the malguzar's title in the site permanently inasmuch as the transferee would be entitled to hold in the same manner as Musammam Kamodi and would be entitled to transfer the site in a similar way when he himself no longer wished to occupy it. In this case the fact that the house was a substantial one and that the two houses together were sold for Rs. 600, appears to have been the deciding factor in the mind of the learned District Judge. The question of value seems to me in this case to be immaterial and in claiming the site to be transferable the defendants claim ownership of the site in Musammam Kamodi, a right which she did not possess. The transfer of this site as of other village sites is subject to the consent of the malguzar which in this case has been refused and the plaintiff's contention must succeed.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court is accordingly set aside and that of the trial Court restored. The respondents will pay the appellant's costs throughout.

Second Appeal against decision of the Additional District Judge, Khandwa, dated the 16th July, 1927.

Messrs. M. R. Bobde, W. R. Puranik and R. M. Bhaghade, for the Appellants

Mr. Shridharrao Gokhale, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—By my order dated the 3rd September, 1931, in Miscellaneous Judicial Case No. 42 of 1930, I allowed the appellants an opportunity to argue grounds Nos. 3, second part of 4 (a), 4 (b), 5 and 10 of the original memorandum of appeal, as it was agreed by the parties that these grounds though touched in arguments, were not dealt with in my previous judgment.

The relevant facts may be restated thus:—

The field in dispute was originally sir field No. 376 which was mortgaged by Kashiram with the plaintiff as far back as 1886. This field was sold and purchased by the plaintiff on 15th August, 1908, in execution of the mortgage decree in Civil Suit No. 165 of 1907 and since only formal possession was then taken by the plaintiff, he, in 1914 instituted Suit No. 236 of 1914 for khas possession of this land against the quondam mortgagor Kashiram the predecessor in-title of the defendants-appellants. When the case came up before this Court in Second Appeal No. 557 of 1915 it was held that the plaintiff purchased in the auction sale only the proprietary rights and not the cultivating rights in the sir field, which remained with Kashiram, in view of the provisions of s. 45 (1) of Tenancy Act then in force. The result of this litigation was a declaration by the highest Judicial Authority in the land that in the year 1914 when Suit No. 236 of 1914 was brought, field No. 376 had lost its character as sir land, the plaintiff becoming the proprietor and Kashiram the ex-proprietary occupancy tenant thereof.

This decision was given on 5th January, 1917, (Ex. P. 4) in spite of the fact that in the Settlement of 1912-13 of the land was still recorded as "sir of Kashiram" (Ex. P. 12), apparently in ignorance of the fact that it had lost its character of sir land under the provisions of s. 45 of the C. P. Tenancy Act of 1898. On 1st July, 1924 Sakharam having surrendered his occupancy rights, the plaintiff-respondent brought the present suit to eject the defendants-appellants who claimed to hold possession of the field under a prior lease from Sakharam.

Ground No. 3 runs as under:—

"That the settlement entry showed the field as sir, this entry was final and conclusive and was not challenged in proper time. The plaintiff cannot plead and prove in the present suit that the field was held in occupancy right by Kashiram and Sakharam."

The contention of the learned Advocate for the appellants is that this settlement entry of 1912-13, recording the land as "sir of Kashiram," not having been set aside in a regular suit under s. 83 of the Land Revenue Act of 1898, became final and conclusive and, therefore, in spite of the judgment of Batten, A. J. C., in Second Appeal No. 557 of 1915, the land remained as sir of the original proprietor and could not legally be surrendered by his son Sakharam, to the plaintiff on 1st July, 1924, as his ex-proprietary occupancy holding. It was, therefore, urged that the plaintiff acquired no title by the surrender to maintain the present suit for possession. This contention is indeed very plausible but clearly untenable for two very sound reasons.

In the first place, the argument completely ignores the interpretation placed by this Court, time and again, as to the limited scope of the provisions of s. 69 of the old O. P. Land Revenue Act, sub-s. (4) whereof declares that an order or entry of the Settlement Officer recording or omitting or refusing to record any land as sir land, shall be final, unless and until it is reversed or modified by the decree of a Civil Court in a suit instituted under s. 82 within one year after the Settlement comes into effect. In Dinanath v. Manbodhi (1), Stanyon, A. J. O. held that the section in question merely deals with the classification of land and does not in any way touch the question of proprietary rights therein, which may be decided whenever an occasion for such a decision arises, irrespective of a suit under s. 83 of the Land Revenue Act. The point was further made clear by Batten, O. J. O., in Hazarimal v. Shyanibahu, Second Appeal No. 508 of 1917 decided on 6th April, 1918, the facts of which were almost identical with those of the present case. That was a suit by the plaintiff for the correction of a settlement entry, which recorded the defendant as a proprietor instead of as an occupancy tenant of sir land. The two Courts below dismissed the suit solely on the ground of limitation, holding that the special period of one year laid down in sub-s. (4) of s. 69 of the Land Revenue Act, was applicable to the case. In repelling this view the learned Officiating Judicial Commissioner made the following weighty pronouncement:—

"Section 69 relates to disputes as to whether or not land admittedly belonging to a particular proprietor is sir land or not sir land. Section 69 has no application whatever to disputes as to whether A or B is the proprietor of land. In this case the plaintiffs' claim is that they are the proprietors of the land and that the defendant No. 1 is only their occupancy tenant. They complain that at the settlement the defendant No. 1 was recorded as proprietor instead of as occupancy tenant. The mistake alleged to have occurred is that whereas defendant No. 1 was formerly the proprietor of the land as his sir and he has now ceased to be proprietor and has now become occupancy tenant, he is still wrongly recorded as proprietor of the sir land instead of as occupancy tenant of the land which was formerly sir. If the plaintiffs fail in their case they can have no possible objection to the defendant No. 1 being recorded as sir proprietor instead of ordinary proprietor. The question whether the land would be recorded as sir or not does not arise in the case. The sole question is whether or not plaintiff is the proprietor and defendant No. 1 the tenant. The special rule of limitation laid down in s. 69 (4) of the O. P. Land Revenue Act has, therefore, no application whatever to the case."

To the same effect is the decision of Baker, J. C. in Jagatsingh v. Dharoopsingh S. A. No. 585 of 1922 decided on 5th January 1924. Accepting the view of law laid down in the aforesaid cases as absolutely sound I overrule the contention of the appellants' Counsel, that the settlement entry of the year 1912-13 could not be challenged as incorrect in the present litigation, simply because it was not set aside in a suit under s. 83 of old O. P. Land Revenue Act. That the entry is clearly erroneous has not been and cannot be disputed at all, because, long before it came to be made, the land had already lost its character of sir under the provisions of s. 45 of the O. P. Tenancy Act of 1898 and should not, therefore, have been recorded as sir land, even under the provisions of s. 69 (1) of the old Land Revenue Act.

In the next place the matter under discussion is concluded as res judicata by the decision in Civil Suit No. 233 of 1914 (Ex. P. 8), which culminated in Second Appeal No. 557 of 1915 (Ex. P. 4). That was essentially a suit for determination of the question of title to the land in dispute in the present case; the plaintiff claimed both the proprietary and the cultivating rights therein by virtue of his auction-purchase, whereas the then defendant Kashiram denied the plaintiff's title only to the cultivating rights in the land. In spite of the fact that an year prior to the institution of the suit the Settlement Officer had recorded the field as his sir, Kashiram did not, in his defence, rely on this entry, which he might and ought to have done under the fourth explanation to s. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, in other words if he at all relied on the settlement entry it was obligatory upon him to defend that suit by pleading that the entry had wiped off even the proprietary rights which the plaintiff may have acquired in the land in dispute by his auction purchase. As would appear from the first Court's judgment in that suit (Ex. P. 8), the only issue framed on the question of title was "Whether the plaintiff obtained only the proprietary rights or the cultivating rights also in the sale." The decision of the trial Court as well as of that Court on this issue was that although the decree obtained in Civil Suit No. 165 of 1907 directed the sale of both the proprietary and the tenant rights in the land, the plaintiff under the law then in force, could not acquire both, but that he simply got the proprietary rights and the cultivating rights in the land remained with the defendant. In other words, the defendant was declared an expropriatory occupancy tenant of the land, and plaintiff the proprietor thereof, with the result that the settlement entry of 1912-13, recording Kashiram as the sole proprietor of the land, was constructively held incorrect. Since the defendants-appellants defended the present suit on a title derived from Kashiram's son Sakharam, they are precluded from challenging the plaintiff's title to the proprietary interest in the land and Sakharam's title as occupancy tenant thereof which were finally determined in the previous litigation. I hold then that on 1st July, 1914, Sakharam was only an occupancy tenant of the original sir field No. 376, which is the field in dispute, and that he could validly surrender his tenant right to the plaintiff, who was the landlord of the holding.

Even taking the position of the appellants as rank trespassers in possession of the land in dispute, because the five years' lease on the basis of which they originally resisted the plaintiff's claim for possession is held inoperative and fictitious, it is clear that they may not be bound by the decision arrived at in the previous litigation of 1914-17. It is however equally clear that on the facts ascertained in the present case the plaintiff has so well established his own title and that of Sakharam to the land in dispute as landlord and occupancy tenant respectively before the surrender that the surrender of the holding by Sakharam to the plaintiff has clothed the latter with all the legal rights to successfully claim eviction of the appellants as trespassers.

On grounds Nos. 4 (a) (second part) and 4 (b) it was argued that the lower Court's decision, that the surrender was not fictitious, fraudulent or champertous was wrong because the courts below failed to take into consideration the order of the Insolvency Court (Ex. P-24) which declared certain transfers made by Sakharam fictitious and fraudulent. There is undoubtedly no mention in the judgments of both the courts below of the Insolvency order, but it cannot be assumed that the matter was not before them when they gave their findings. However, in view of the fact that Sakharam himself as O. W. No. 1 clearly stated that he had received Rs. 1000, as consideration for the surrender, the lower Courts' finding that the surrender was genuine is perfectly correct. This matter has been dealt with by the lower Appellate Court in para. 13 of its judgment. I agree with the concurrent findings of the courts below that the deed of surrender was a genuine transaction. In view of this clear finding it is obvious that the surrender could not be held fictitious, fraudulent or champertous.

Ground No. 5 could not be pressed in view of the conclusive finding that the lease in favour of the appellants was inoperative and fictitious.

On ground No. 10 it was argued that, since the evidence of Sakharam shows that the appellant Chaganlal was already in permissive possession of the land in dispute for some time prior to the filing of the present suit on 15th November 1924, a reasonable notice to quit should have been given to the appellants by the plaintiff before he could eject them. I find it difficult to appreciate this argument. In their pleadings the appellants did not assert anywhere that they were in permissive possession of the field at any time prior to 18-3-1923, when the five years' lease (Ex. D. 12) in their favour was to come into force. It has undoubtedly come out in the evidence of Sakharam that the appellant Chaganlal was associated with him in the cultivation of the field in suit for an year prior to the five years' lease. There are however no materials on the record to prove the exact terms under which the appellants were in possession of the land in 1922-23, except that in the jamabandi of that year (Ex. D. 3) the appellant Gulabchand is recorded as holding the land on batai. The appellant's possession in 1923 was evidently under Ex. D. 12 which has been found by all the courts to be a fictitious lease. On such materials as are on the record it is difficult to hold that Gulabchand's or Chaganlal's possession in 1922-23 was that of a sub-tenant, holding from year to year, as was the case in Sheomangal v. Nanhelal (2), so as to entitle the appellants to receive a reasonable notice to quit before ejection. It was observed in Thakur Mooratsing v. Muni-lal (3) that where the person in possession of a holding is proved to have been a sub-tenant from year to year for a number of years, a presumption may arise that the sub-tenancy was renewed in subsequent years; but there is no presumption that a sub-tenancy for a single year continued after that year had expired. At the most, then, the possession of Gulabchand or Chaganlal for one year in 1922-23 was merely that of a licensee for a fixed term of one year.

(3) 103 Ind. Cas. 703; 23 N. L. R. 148; A. I. R. 1927 Nag. 820.

That being the position, the license must be deemed to have been revoked at the end of the year and the appellants were not entitled to any notice to quit, as is now contended for on their behalf, vide s. 62 (c) of the Indian Easements Act, 1882.

For the reasons given above I confirm my previous judgment and decree dismissing the appeal. The costs of this re-hearing of the appeal will be paid by the appellants in addition to the costs already scheduled. Pleader's fee Rs. 75.

Mortgage—Interest—Presumptions as to rate—No provision as to rate of interest—Entire sum payable on default—Reasonable rate.

If a mortgage-deed contains stipulations regarding the payment of interest till the date fixed for payment, a presumption arises that the parties intended that interest should be paid after the date and where no inference regarding the rates can be drawn the presumption is that it was intended to pay interest at a reasonable rate. [p. 888, col. 2.]

A mortgage-deed in which prospective interest had been added as sawai and which provided for payment in instalments contained a clause that if instalments were defaulted interest at 2 per cent. per mensem compound was to be paid till satisfaction. There was, however, a further clause that, if two instalments were defaulted, the whole amount should become due. The deed made no provision for interest on the whole sum if it became due.

Held, (i) that as there was no precise definition of the rate of interest prior to default, it was not possible to draw an inference that the parties intended that after the whole amount became due, interest should be paid at the rate which can be deduced from the arrangement regarding addition of sawai and payment by instalment; [p. 888, col. 1.]

(ii) that as the terms of the deed did not indicate what rate of interest should be paid after the entire amount became due the plaintiff was only entitled to a reasonable rate of interest. Asaram v. Dnanoba (1), Sheoppa v. Rukhma (2) and Mahadeo Prasad v. Dhira Singh (3), distinguished. [ibid.]

First Civil Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 27th August 1928.

Mr. W. R. Puranik, for the Appellant.

Judgment.—The sole point raised in this appeal refers to the amount of interest included in the amount due on the mortgage in suit. The mortgage was executed to provide for the payment of old debts: 25 per cent. was added to the amount found due and the deed provided for payment in ten instalments. The learned Additional District Judge has stated that the amount of interest which would have been paid, if there had been no default, works out to Rs. $1\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. per annum, but this is a miscalculation. As the debtors had to repay a portion of the debt each year, they were not to enjoy the use of the whole money for ten years: taking an average they were to enjoy its use for $5\frac{1}{2}$ years and the rate of interest was $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum. The deed contains a clause that if instalments were defaulted, interest at 2 per cent. per mensem compound was to be paid till satisfaction. There is, however, a further clause that, if two instalments were defaulted, the whole amount should become due, and the deed makes no provision for interest on the whole sum if it became due.

The trial Judge relying on Asaram v. Dnanoba (1), has held that after the whole sum became exigible, the mortgagees were entitled to interest only at the rate at which the principal sum would have borne interest if there had been no default. The Judge states that this rate was $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum, but has allowed 6 per cent. per annum because the defendants agreed to pay interest at that rate.

In appeal it is urged that interest should throughout have been allowed at the rate which, it was agreed, should be paid on defaulted instalments. Reliance is placed on Sheoppa v. Rukhma (2): but that case merely decided how a particular bond should be interpreted. The deed provided for payment of instalments without interest: the interest on defaulted instalments was moderate. The Judge came to the conclusion that the deed read as a whole embodied the intention of the parties that interest should be paid after the whole sum became due at the rate agreed with respect to the defaulted instalments.

The next argument is that the decision in Asaram v. Dnanoba (1), has no application to the facts we are considering. In our opinion, this contention is correct. In the deed considered in Asaram v. Dnanoba (1), there was a clear and definite agreement to pay interest 14 annas per cent. per mensem on the principal amount up to the date fixed for payment: there was no express stipulation to pay interest after the whole sum became exigible, and it was held, following Mahadeo Prasad v. Dhiraj Singh (3), that the plaintiff was then entitled to interest at the original rate of 14 annas per cent. per mensem. In Mahadeo Prasad v. Dhiraj Singh (3), it is remarked that for five years the rate of interest was defined with precision, and an inference was drawn that, if the mortgagor failed to pay at the end of five years, it was intended that the mortgagor should pay interest at the same rate.

In the case we are considering there is no precise definition of the rate of interest prior to default: it is not possible to draw an inference that the parties intended that after the whole amount became due, interest should be paid at the rate which can be deduced from the arrangement regarding addition of sawai and payment by instalments.

The appellants' Counsel urges that the clause regarding interest on defaulted instalments shows that the parties intended that interest at the rate mentioned should be paid after the entire amount became due. But the rate of interest is very high and the condition may merely have provided for the period until the whole amount became recoverable.

In our opinion, then, as the terms of the deed do not indicate what rate of interest should be paid after the entire amount became due, a reasonable rate of interest should be allowed by the Court. Order XXXIV, r. 11 of the First Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code, directs that the Court should award such interest and though this rule was added after the trial Judge delivered his judgment, it reproduces the view previously held by the majority of High Courts. This view is based on the principles which were applied both in Sheoppa v. Rukhma (2), and Asaram v. Dnanoba (1). The presumption is that when a mortgage-deed is executed the parties contemplate the possibility that payment may not be made at the time when the entire amount becomes due. If the deed contains stipulations regarding payment of interest before this date, a presumption arises that the parties intended that interest should be paid after that date. Stipulations may be such as to justify an inference that interest on the due date is to be paid at a particular rate: but where no inference regarding the rate can be drawn, the presumption is that it was intended to pay interest at a reasonable rate.

We think that six per cent per annum is not a rate which might have been contemplated by the parties. We fix 12 per cent. per annum simple interest as a reasonable rate.

A fresh date for payment will now be fixed three months from the date of this judgment: the amount due on that date will be calculated, interest being allowed at the rate we have held to be reasonable. Costs in this appeal calculated on the amount to which it has succeeded will be added to the amount found due: the respondents incurred no costs. The trial Judge's order as to costs is not very clear. The plaintiff's costs, calculated by taking the amount for which he should have sued as a basis, will also be added to the sum found due.

Order accordingly.

Landlord and tenant—Permanent tenancy—Question of legal inference from proved facts—Weight of circumstances—Facts must be taken as a whole—Purpose of tenancy, prior transfers, etc.—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 106, applicability of, to tenancies before 1882.

The question whether a tenancy is permanent is not to be treated as itself a mere question of fact though the actual findings of fact are binding upon the High Court in second appeal. Dhanamal v. Moti Sagar (1), referred to. [p. 889, col. 2.]

In considering whether the proper legal inference from the facts proved is that the tenancy was a permanent one, it is necessary to bear in mind two considerations. The first is that the legal inference of permanency is to be drawn from the ascertained facts taken as a whole. The second is that even although there be a considerable number of facts which point to the tenancy having a permanent character, the effect of these facts as evidence may be entirely destroyed by a single piece of negative evidence. [p. 890, col. 1.]

Upon the question whether a tenancy is permanent or not the law of India attaches a good deal of importance to the question whether the tenancy was for residential purposes. [p. 890, col. 2.]

Prior to the Transfer of Property Act a tenancy which was not permanent was not transferable, and the fact that the transfer was recognized by the landlord without any claim being made to require the transferee to make terms with him for a new tenancy points very firmly in favour of a permanent right. [p. 891, col. 2.]

A statement in the rent receipts that the rents are paid for certain specified months or for a certain number of months is neutral. A tenant taking such a receipt cannot be held to have no higher right than a monthly tenant. [p. 892, col. 2.]

[Their Lordships held on all the circumstances that the tenancy was a permanent one].

Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act is not applicable to tenancies created before 1882. [p. 892, col. 2.]

Letters Patent Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Cuming, dated the 10th December, 1930.

Messrs. Sarat Chandra Basak and Rupendra Kumar Mitter, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Brojo Lal Chakrawarti and Bijan Kumar Mukerji, for the Respondent.

Rankin, O. J.—This is a Letters Patent Appeal from the judgment of Cuming, J., sitting in second appeal, the learned Judge having granted leave to appeal under s. 15, Letters Patent.

The suit has reference to a plot of land in Howrah lying between Howrah Road and the river. The size of the plot is 8 cottas. The Munsif inspected it on 7th April, 1926. He found an old boundary wall on the north side of it, a pucca privy and a square pucca ghar some 11½ feet long. 10 feet broad with a 3 feet wide verandah; height about 8 feet 10 inches above the plinth. There were certain tile-roofed huts some of which had brick walls. The plaintiff has a mukarrari right under the zemindar and he contends that the tenancy is a monthly tenancy which he has determined by service of defendants is that the tenancy is an old one, in origin anterior to the Transfer of Property Act of 1882, that it was given for residential purposes and is a permanent tenancy.

It was held by the Judicial Committee in the case of Dhanamal v. Moti Sagar (1), that the question whether a tenancy is permanent is not to be treated as itself a mere question of fact. Actual findings of fact by the lower Appellate Court however are binding upon us.

The plaintiff's original case was that defendant No. 1, Bhagaban, took settlement from the plaintiff himself as a monthly tenant upon a monthly rent of Re. 1-15 0. This case however has been disbelieved and is not further persisted in. Indeed it is manifestly false. The evidence shows that prior to 1874 this very tenancy was possessed by one Gourdas Bairagi. Secondary evidence, which both courts have accepted, has been given of a kabala (Ex. A-1) whereby Gourdas Bairagi sold it to Dinanath Sarkar. At some time before 1911 Dinanath was succeeded by Bhagaban who is said to have been his adopted son. In 1920 (1327 Aswin) the plaintiff served a notice of ejectment upon Bhagaban. In the month of Magh thereafter, the present appellants purchased the interest of Bhagaban for a sum of Rs. 14,700 by the kabala Ex. A. This appears to have been a speculative purchase but there is no evidence to show or even to suggest that it was not a genuine bargain and on the question of the payment of consideration the witnesses for the defence were not cross-examined to any such case. By 1921 indeed it would seem clear that the defendants' interest in the suit land had very considerable value because at the time when the plaintiff was valuing this suit for purposes of jurisdiction upon the footing of the market value of the land he valued his suit at Rs. 10,808 as appears from the judgment of the Munsif.

(1) 101 Ind. Cas. 355; A. I. R. 1927 P. C. 102; 54 I. A. 178; 8 Lah. 573; 52 M. L. J. 663; 29 Bom. L. R. 570; (1927) M. W. N. 481 (P. C.).

The learned Munsif held in favour of the defendants, that the tenancy was a permanent one and transferable, finding that the origin of the tenancy was not known, that it was for residential purposes, that it was granted long before the Transfer of Property Act, that there has been uniform payment of rent, that there are old substantial pucca structures on the land and that there has been one case of transfer and one succession recognized by the landlord. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge found in favour of the plaintiff, basing his judgment upon the language of certain rent receipts in the eighties and nineties from which he infers that the tenancy was a monthly tenancy. The learned Subordinate Judge explains in his judgment that but for these rent receipts he would not have differed from the trial court; but he thinks that they are fatal to the case of the defence and clearly shows that the tenancy is from month to month.

In considering whether the proper legal inference from the facts proved is that the tenancy was a permanent one, it is necessary I think to bear in mind two considerations. The first is that the legal inference of permanency is to be drawn from the ascertained facts taken as a whole. It may well be that the element of the uniformity of rent, of the existence of pucca structures or any other element taken by itself would not necessarily involve or demonstrate a permanent right. But in the present case there are a number of elements and it is only upon a complete review of all the relevant considerations that one is in a position to draw the proper inference. It will not do to take each element by itself and to reject them one after another as insufficient. The reasoning of the learned Judge in second appeal is I think open to some criticism on this score.

A second thing which it is important to bear in mind is that even although there be a considerable number of facts which point to the tenancy having a permanent character, the effect of these facts as evidence may be entirely destroyed by a single piece of negative evidence. In appreciating and acting upon this principle the learned Subordinate Judge is justified in his method, whether or not he has applied that method correctly to the facts.

Postponing for the moment the consideration of the question whether the rent receipts show that the tenancy was a monthly tenancy, I cannot doubt that the broader facts proved with reference to the tenancy, make an impressive case for the inference of permanency. There can I think be no doubt that the tenancy dates back to some considerable time before 1874. The recitals in the kabala of 1874 are not shown to have come to the notice of the landlord and while they are evidence, they are evidence only of the fact that the tenant in 1874 is making a claim to certain rights: cf. Evidence Act, s. 13. A tenant selling his holding, might of course very easily claim that it was permanent when it was not; but he would be soon found out if he misstated the rent and it would be of little use to misdescribe the structures on the land. In 1874 it appears that there were five huts with tiled roofs and one old pucca structure apart from certain thatched sheds and certain cutch walls. The actual origin of the tenancy is unknown but it can hardly be doubted that prior to 1874 we find the property being used for residential purposes. At that date we find also the pucca ghar treated as an old structure which Gourdas had a right to sell. It has been contended for the plaintiff that when defendant No. 2 brought from Bhagaban in 1920 he says that he asked for the patta and was told that the patta had been lost, and that for this reason we should not treat this tenancy as one whose origin is unknown. This however seems to me unreasonable. Again it is said that Gourdas, according to the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, was an itinerant sort of person moving from place to place with his thakurs, having no place of residence. This is set forth in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court as something to be found in the evidence of D. W. No. 2 Sagor Chander Adhikari. But I have been unable to find any evidence to this effect. On the contrary, the witness remembers Gourdas living on the suit land with a Thakurgarh and some Khola ghars; he remembers Gourdas when he (witness) was 5 or 6 years old and he says that Gourdas went to Brindaban when the witness was 19 or 20 and Gourdas was about 40 years old.

Upon the question whether a tenancy is permanent or not the law of India, as I understand it, attaches a good deal of importance to the question whether the tenancy was for residential purposes. This is apart altogether from the question whether substantial structures were built upon the land. Substantial structures may be built for the purposes of shops but in this country the old-fashioned notion at all events was that a place which was intended as a family home was very likely to be intended to be held in permanent right. There is a strong disinclination to move from the ancestral home whatever it may be, and it is this element that accounts for the importance attributed by the law to the question whether the tenancy was granted for the purpose of residence. It is contended that from this point of view a Bairagi is somewhat different from the ordinary member of the public and that in this case no great importance attaches to the fact that we find this tenancy being used and enjoyed for the purpose of residence. I doubt extremely whether any force should be attributed to this criticism. On the evidence Gourdas seems to have been on this land for a substantial time and when in 1874 he ultimately decided to go to Brindaban and to sell his right, it is clear I think that he had been erecting structures for living purposes upon the land in addition to the old pucca garh.

Prior to the Transfer of Property Act a tenancy which was not permanent was certainly not transferable, and the fact that the transfer was recognized by the landlord without any claim being made to require the transferee to make terms with him for a new tenancy points very firmly in favour of a permanent right. It is true that in this case there is only one transfer and that one cannot necessarily expect the plaintiff to have in his possession any detailed evidence as to his recognition of Dinanath; but the plaintiff gives no evidence of having obtained a salami or nazar and Dinanath having taken the kabala (Ex. A-1) had himself recorded in the landlord's sherista and paid rent in his own name. There is no evidence of any difficulty having arisen by reason of Dinanath having bought a transferable right which Gourdas had no title to give him. It is true however that the fact that Gourdas professed to transfer the right as a permanent one is not brought home to the knowledge of the landlord. Again when Dinanath died, Bhagaban was allowed to continue in the tenancy. One succession in a case of this kind has no great force of itself. It is readily seen that a landlord might not utilize the occasion of a tenant's death to oust his family.

Whether or not he would utilize it as a suitable opportunity to make a claim for higher rent depends upon circumstances. In the present case it would appear that the facts are rather special.

There was a rent suit in 1903 in which the plaintiff claimed rent of Rs. 28-2-0 for the years 1311-1314 (1904.07) and which was decreed on compromise at a lesser rate. There was another suit against defendant No. 1 in 1911 which raised the question of the nature of the tenancy as well as the amount of the rent. This was compromised at the rate of Rs. 23-2-0 and the question of status was left open. It was however decided that the jama was an annual jama of Rs. 23-2-0. It would seem that from 1911 down to the time of the present suit, the plaintiff showed a certain willingness to challenge the defendants' permanent right, but had never forced it to a conclusion, and the origin of the present suit is plain enough. Proceedings having been taken under s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, and the Magistrate having decided in favour of the defendants, the plaintiff had to bring his suit or lose his claim. On the whole however there is in these circumstances not much force in the fact that Bhagaban succeeded Dinanath. I now come to the question of uniformity of rent.

The learned Subordinate Judge in 1928 observed that the appellants in purchasing this property "purchased a litigation and took a chance as the price of town lands has gone up very high." There is ample evidence to support this finding and I have already referred to the plaintiff's own valuation, Rs. 10,808. In addition there were proceedings in 1908 whereby two chittaks of frontage of this land were taken for road widening purposes at Rs. 1,000, per cotta. As against a rent of Rs. 23-2-0, the capital value of this land had clearly risen very much both before 1903 and after. This circumstance seems to give much significance to the fact of uniformity of rent.

It would seem impossible to doubt that the rent of this holding was an annual rent of Rs. 23-2-0. This was stated in the kabala of 1874 and to this effect also is the compromise decree in the suit of 1911. The plaintiff's case was that the rent was a monthly rent of Re. 1-15-0, which would amount to Rs. 23-4-0 for the year. The rent receipts themselves show that the rent for a year was Rs. 23-2-0. From the first time to which we can trace the matter down to present time rent at no other rate has ever been paid. Now, it was very important for the plaintiff to dislodge this figure of Rs 23 2-0; because if the tenancy was let at so much per month, the monthly rent must have been the curious figure of Re. 1-14-3 and $1\frac{1}{2}$ gandas. Hence the plaintiff falsely claimed that the annual rent was Re. 23 4-0, so that he might make out that the property had been let at Re. 1-15-0 per month.

Let us see then if the rent receipts of the eighties show a monthly tenancy. The ordinary kists in Bengal fall in the third, sixth, ninth and twelfth months of Bengali year—Asar, Aswin, Pous and Chaitra—rent being due and in arrear at sunset on the last day of these months. Every one of the receipts produced shows payment being made at or about the time of a kist—sometimes payment is made for the three previous months, sometimes for six previous months and sometimes for twelve. But all payments are in English language for one or more quarters and they are all at a rate which stated in terms of a year, is Rs. 23 2 0, and in terms of a month would work out to the figure given, viz, Re. 1-14-3, $1\frac{1}{2}$ gandas. The statement in the rent receipts is a statement of the months, e.g., from Sravan to Aswin, from Baisak to Aswin, from Baisak to Chaitra. In some rent receipts that is all that is given in explanation of the amount paid; in others there is added the phrase "for three months" or "for six months". It seems to me that such a statement in rent receipts is entirely neutral. It does not show whether it is done to explain that the rent is paid as a certain fraction of an annual rent or a certain multiple of a monthly rent. Nowhere does the corresponding figure for one month Re. 1-14-3, $1\frac{1}{2}$ gandas appear in these receipts. No payment is for less than a quarter and all payments are at the time of the kist.

The tenancy is clearly proved to have originated before the Transfer of Property Act of 1882 which did not apply to the tenancy at all: cf. s. 2. I think it is probably quite true that the ordinary Bengali custom, such as obtains in the mufassil and in respect of agricultural rents, would rather be to describe a payment as a payment for the Aswin kist than as payment from Sravan to Aswin for three months. But the mere fact that a receipt is not in the most usual form is not a reason for giving it a meaning which it does not necessarily bear. The receipts in question are on the printed forms which in some cases are adopted to distinguish between current rent and arrears; but speaking generally, the distinction is not observed when making the manuscript entry and the entry is made as one, e.g., from Baisak to Chaitra rent for 12 months; or Baisak to Aswin for six months.

We have no evidence as to the practice of the sherista of the plaintiff or his predecessors at this time when dealing with rents in the town or environs of Howrah. They may very well have used such a form of receipt for old tenancies and for new, and it may have been used because it was noncommittal. But that a tenant taking such a receipt is to be held as acknowledging that he has no greater right than that of a monthly tenant because he did not quarrel with the form of the receipt seems to me to be unreasonable and unjust.

It was contended for the plaintiff that the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge of these rent receipts was a finding of fact binding upon this court in second appeal and that even if he had mistaken the meaning or exceeded the meaning of the documents the question not being one of construction of a document of title, the error was not an error of law. I cannot however agree that under Dhanamal's case (1) the question whether a tenancy is permanent is or involves a question of law for us and that at the same time the finding that the tenancy is a monthly one is a finding of pure fact by the Subordinate Judge. Let us see what the findings are.

The learned Judge does not seem to doubt that the rent was an annual rent, but he thinks that these receipts refer to a monthly tenancy under s. 106, Transfer of Property Act. Under s. 107, Transfer of Property Act, a contract to pay a yearly rent, if it be not contained in a registered lease will in some cases be inoperative under s. 106 to make the tenancy anything more than a monthly tenancy. But while this is doubtless possible under such rule or some special stipulation a monthly tenancy at a yearly rent is an anomaly and difficult to infer. In view of s. 2, Transfer of Property Act, the opinion of the learned Subordinate Judge would seem to involve that the present tenancy does not go back before 1882, but is a renewed tenancy of later date to which the Act applied since it is quite certain that the Act did not cut down an old tenancy into a monthly one. That however as I read his judgment is not really his finding. He considers if I understand him aright that the receipts show that prior to 1882 the tenant had no higher right, but does not appreciate that s. 106 of the Act would have no application to the tenancy at all.

The learned Subordinate Judge does however say of these rent receipts:

"At least the petitioners never acknowledged Dinanath as a permanent tenant but allowed him to stay on as a thicca tenant from month to month, a tenant-at-will. This is clear from the rent receipts filed by the defendants."

If this is a finding of fact based upon the unusual character rather than upon the necessary meaning of the receipt, it must mean that in, say, 1885 the tenant was known to be claiming a higher right and the landlord was not willing to admit it. I think the learned Subordinate Judge means also to find that the tenant knew his claim to be disputed. If that be so then in Dinanath's life-time the landlord did not try conclusions with him but in 1911 raised the question against Bhagaban and postponed the issue till 1920, when he served notice in ejectment.

Upon the whole I cannot agree that the rent receipts have the meaning which the lower Appellate Court has attached to them. I think that they are no evidence at all to show that the tenancy was being treated as a monthly tenancy and that the finding to this effect is partly due to the fact that the learned Subordinate Judge has interpreted them by s. 106 of the Act without appreciating that the section would not apply to any tenancy which originated before 1882. To hold on the basis of these receipts that in the eighties the landlord was disputing a claim to permanent right is I think a hazardous surmise. To negative such a claim a landlord must I think be less subtle and less ambiguous in the wording of his receipts.

Differing, as I think myself entitled to do, from the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge of the rent receipts I think the correct inference in this case is that the tenancy was a permanent one which indeed, upon the same footing, would have been his view. The structures upon the land are I think substantial structures. Though not very costly ones, they are not of a character readily reconcilable with a precarious tenancy. The learned Subordinate Judge admits that there is some force in this contention,

I do not think this force is lessened by the fact that Gourdas did not dedicate the ghar as a permanent temple when he left—as I read the translation of the kabala of 1874 it is not clear that Gourdas built the pucca ghar himself.

In my judgment the other elements in this case are complete and strong to show that the tenancy was permanent. The case law on this subject has been carefully laid before us, but I think that the principles upon which such cases as the present fall to be decided are now sufficiently well settled to make it unnecessary to discuss them once again in this judgment.

I would allow the appeal, set aside the decrees of Ouming, J., and the Subordinate Judge and restore the decree of the Munsif with costs throughout.

Executor—Borrowing money as executor—Liability of estate—Creditor's right—Mere right of indemnity—English and Indian Law.

Whatever differences there may be in the equity in favour of a creditor who has lent money to an executor according as it is applied for a purpose sanctioned by the will or a purpose not expressly sanctioned by it, the highest right that such a creditor may claim against the estate on the finding that it has been enriched or benefited by the money is a right to be subrogated to the right of the executor to be indemnified out of the estate to the necessary extent, and unless the right of the executor to the indemnity is established the creditor has none as against the estate where no charge has validly been created on the estate. [p. 898, col. 1.]

There is no difference between the English and Indian Law in this respect. A decree against the estate could not be passed in such cases under s. 70, Contract Act *Ramanath Paul v. Appeal against original decree of the Sub-Judge, Murshidabad, dated the 23rd December, 1927.

Messrs. Sarat Chandra Basak and Rajendra Bhusan Bakshi, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Brojendra Nath Chatterji, Benoyendra Prasad Bagchi and Amarendra Narayan Bagchi, for the Respondents.

Judgment—The plaintiff is the appellant in this appeal. The allegations on which his suit was founded were the following: That the husband of defendant No. 1, left a will appointing her and some other persons as executors, giving her permission to adopt and providing that she would remain in management of the properties until the adopted son came to be of 21 years of age; that defendant No. 1 obtained probate of the will and acted as executrix; that defendant No. 1 took defendant No. 2 in adoption, and the latter had instituted a suit against defendant No. 1 in which defendant No. 3 had been appointed administrator pendente lite; that defendant No. 1 as such executrix borrowed money on handnotes (seven in number) for paying the Government revenue due on the estate but never repaid the same. It was further alleged in the plaint that the loans were taken for legal necessities and that the estate was benefited thereby. In the suit as originally laid defendant No. 1 was impleaded in her capacity as executrix, and it was prayed that a decree might be passed for the amounts due together with interest etc., against all the defendants and for recovery thereof from the estate itself. The original plaint was filed on 6th February 1926.

The answer of defendant No. 1 was that the loans were taken for legal necessity and for payment of Government revenue due on the estate, that she had been removed from her position as executrix and defendant No. 2 had taken over the estate as malik, and that, therefore, defendants Nos. 2 and 3 and not she, were liable. She also averred that the account given in the plaint was not correct and that the claim for interest was unjust and exorbitant.

Defendant No. 2 in his written statement made various allegations, most of which are immaterial now as they are either not proved or are untrue. The only averments that require mention are the following:

"Para. 6.—That this defendant does not admit that there were any legal necessities for taking loans of the money covered by those handnotes or that the sums were borrowed for the benefit of the estate, or that the same were spent for the preservation of the estate."

"Para. 7.—That even admitting for arguments sake that the handnotes were legally executed and the sums were borrowed for the benefit of the estate, the estate, is not legally liable for them. They should be regarded as the personal debts of defendant No. 1 and a decree for the same may be passed against her only. No decree can be passed for the said sums against the estate."

"Para. 8.—That the late Upendra Krishna Bandopadhyaya the adoptive father of this defendant, in the will executed by him, did not give any powers to the executors to raise any loan or to charge the estate in any way. On the other hand he made provisions so that the debts he had at the time of his death might be paid off early. Under such circumstances even if defendant No. 1 borrowed any money in any way, she alone is liable for that and the same is not binding on the estate nor is the estate legally liable for that."

"Para 9.—That shortly after defendant No. 1 had taken probate of the will..... a valuable property named (?) belonging to the estate was sold at public auction for the sum of Rs. 39,000 and by that all the debts of the time of her husband were paid off and about Rs. 8,000 remained as surplus to the estate. The net income of the said estate would be a little over Rs. 7,000. Defendant No. 1 has either misappropriated or squandered away the said cash sum in hand. And further by spending at her pleasure the income of the estate, she had also incurred debts to the extent of Rs. 60,000 during her time of management. If the estate has been run into debts through her mismanagement, the estate is not liable for that and even if a decree for the sum claimed in the suit is passed against defendant No. 1, she cannot get any indemnity for the said sum from the estate."

"Para. 13.—Even if the plaintiff was entitled to get any decree, he could not get a decree against the estate, nor was defendant No. 1 entitled to get any indemnity for the decretal money against the estate."

Defendant No. 3 filed a written statement adopting and embodying in it the substance of the averments which defendant No. 2 had made.

Thereafter on 23rd November, 1926, the plaintiff applied for amendment of the plaint alleging that defendant No. 1 had been made a defendant in the suit in her capacity as executrix but to facilitate the realization of the money it is necessary that she should be made a defendant in her personal capacity. He prayed that in the cause title defendant No. 1 might be described as impleaded in her personal capacity as well, and that if she be not held liable as executrix then a decree might be passed against her in her personal capacity.

Amongst the issues that were framed the one that requires mention is issue No. 2 which was in these words:

"Has the plaintiff any cause of action as against defendants Nos. 2 and 3,"

The Subordinate Judge held that the debt was proved, and that the moneys were borrowed for paying Government revenue. He found that the plaintiff had called for the account books of the defendants to show that the moneys were entered therein as having been spent for that purpose, but that the defendants had withheld the same. He held that it had not been established that the executor had authority to borrow money for the purposes of the estate. He held that in such circumstances the debts though they were for legal necessity did not bind the estate. He held that defendant No. 1 alone was liable and in her personal capacity and that the claim on two of the hand-notes was barred before the date on which the said defendant was impleaded in her personal capacity; and he therefore gave the plaintiff a decree as against the said defendant in respect of the other five hand-notes. He made a decree against defendant No. 1 only in these terms, and dismissed the suit as against the other defendants.

The plaintiff has then preferred this appeal. It is clear that if the decree is to be as against defendant No. 1 only and in her personal capacity only the plaintiff cannot get anything more than what she has got. But the plaintiff's contention in the appeal is that he should have a decree against defendants Nos. 2 and 3 as well—such a decree as would bind the estate,—so that he may enforce it as against the estate itself.

Defendant No. 1 has not appeared in the appeal. Defendant No. 3 is not interested in the estate any longer the estate having been taken over by defendant No. 2 some time in 1928. Defendant No. 2 is the only contesting respondent.

On behalf of defendant No. 2 some arguments have been advanced before us to show that the loans were taken and the promissory notes were executed by defendant No. 1 in her personal capacity and not as executrix. The promissory notes were sealed with her seal as executrix and though she signed her own name therein without describing herself as executrix we must hold that the loans were taken by her in that capacity. We also hold in agreement with the court below that the loans were incurred for payment of Government revenue; and from the withholding of the account books on the part of the defendants, we think it right to presume that the amounts were so spent.

The question whether the decree against the estate may be passed or not is one of considerable importance and one not altogether free from difficulty. A number of decisions have been cited before us on this question and we shall have to examine such of them, and also such other decisions as may have a bearing on the question.

The Subordinate Judge has referred to three cases as authorities for the view he took, and it would be convenient to refer to them first. The first case is that of Ramanath Paul v. Kanai Lal Dey (1). In that case the evidence was that the executors borrowed the money secured by a promissory note for the purposes of the estate, represented at the time when the loan was incurred that the money was required for the purposes of the estate and that as a matter of fact the money was utilized for such purposes. The contention was that the plaintiff had a right to a decree not merely against the executor personally, but also against the estate. Sale, J. overruled this contention observing thus:

"I think this contention goes a good deal further than is warranted by any of the decisions in this court. I know of no case in which it has been held that in the absence of any special power given by the will an executor can render the estate liable for moneys borrowed by him for the purposes of the estate. I am quite aware that under certain circumstances an executor in his capacity as manager has the power of pledging specific portions of the estate for purposes of necessity, but that power is quite distinct from the power now claimed which is obviously of a wider character. In England it is settled law as appears from the case of Farhall v. Farhall (2), that an executor has not the power of charging the estate in respect of loans contracted for the purposes of the estate. In the present case it is not suggested that there is any special power given to the executor to borrow, or to charge the estate for loans made to the executor for the benefit of the estate."

The second case is that of Debenira Nath Biswas v. Radhika Charan Sen (3). In that case one of the executors as such had borrowed money on a promissory note and a decree was asked for against all the executors, the other executors contending that they were not liable. It was found that the promissory note was given for goods apparently supplied to the estate. Maclean, C. J., Geidt, J. concurring relying on Farhall v. Farhall (2) and Labouchere v. Tupper (4) held that it was only the executor who had executed the promissory note and taken the loan against whom a decree could be passed. The third case is that of Sudhir Chandra Das v. Govinda Chandra Roy (5). In that case Chitty and Beachcroft, J.J., held that an executor who borrows money in the course of the administration, for the purposes of the estate is personally liable for the payment of such debts, subject to his right of indemnity against the estate upon proof that the borrowing was in all respects proper and for the benefit of the estate. In that case the borrowing executors were repudiating their personal liability. Farhall v. Farhall (2), Labouchere v. Tupper (4) and the two Calcutta decisions already referred to were relied upon in that case.

In Farhall v. Farhall (2), James, L. J. expressed the opinion that neither authority nor principle was in favour of the view that an executor can by borrowing money enable the person who lent it to stand as a creditor to the estate even though the moneys were borrowed for the purposes of the estate; and Mellish, L. J. took it to be settled law that upon a contract of borrowing made by an executor after the death of the testator the executor is only liable personally and cannot be sued as executor so as to get execution against the assets of the testator. In Farhall v. Farhall (2), Bacon, V. C. was inclined to hold that Ashby v. Ashby (6) and other cases recognized the rule that the creditor may have a demand against the executor both de bonis testatoris and de bonis propriis and that there may be a right in the creditor to proceed against the goods of the testator by reason of transactions with the executors, but this view was overruled, and the remarks of Lord Tenterden, C. J., and Bayley, J., in Ashby v. Ashby (6), which spoke of a hardship that might arise, were explained as being confined to cases in which the matter arose out of a contract with or something done by the testator. Mellish, L. J., in Farhall v. Farhall (2), quoted the following statement of the law from Williams on Executors, (Edn. 9, at page 661):

"The more modern authorities have however, established that in several instances the executor may be sued as executor on a promise made by him as executor, and that a declaration founded on such a promise will charge the defendant no further than a declaration on a promise of the testator;" and then observed:

"But if we look through the different cases which follow the statement, it will be found that in every one the consideration for the promise of the executor was a contract or transaction with the testator."

The learned Lord Justice, after referring to two other cases, Dowse v. Core (7) and Powell v. Graham (8), observed thus:

"That shows no doubt that a count for money paid for the use of the executor is a good count to charge him in his representative character, when the demand arises in consequence of a contract or transaction with the testator."

This principle was applied in our court in the case of Satya Prasad Pal v. Moti Lal Pal (9) where the executor had renewed hatchittas in the same terms as the testator had originally executed them. In Labouchere v. Tupper (4) the Privy Council held that an executor of a trader carrying on the trade after his death was personally liable for debts contracted in the trade, and the propriety of his conduct as between himself and the beneficiaries did not give the creditors the right to be treated as creditors of the testator or to give them a charge on the assets.

In the case of In the matter of M. A. Shard (10), Sale J., held that the mere fact that the trustee in carrying on the business of a trust rendered himself personally liable for the business debts would not of itself give the creditors a right to proceed against the trust property, but that the creditors would be at liberty to take such steps as they might be advised to proceed against the trust property in proceedings properly constituted (the beneficiaries were not parties to the proceedings in that case). Dealing with the facts of the case itself he observed thus:

"The mere fact that the suit is described in the cause title as one against the defendant personally, and also in his capacity as trustee would not enable the plaintiff to obtain a decree which could be enforced against the trust property. It is clear upon the authorities, to which I will refer later on, that before the plaintiffs could obtain a decree which they could execute against the trust property they would have to show, first that the trust property under the terms of the settlement was devoted to the purposes of the business of an hotel, and thus made liable to the debts and liabilities which would ordinarily be incurred in the regular course of business, and in the next place they would have to show that the circumstances were such that the defendant as trustee would be entitled to be indemnified by the trust property to the extent of the claim, and further that the plaintiffs as creditors of the hotel business, were entitled to stand in the shoes of the trustee in respect of the indemnity and to be recouped out of the trust estate."

The learned Judge referred to and relied upon three decisions. The first one was Strickland v. Symons (11), in which Lord Selborne said:

"There is no principle or authority for saying that if a trustee makes himself personally liable for goods the creditor thereby obtains a lien on trust property. There is not the least authority for such an action as the present. It is an action for an equitable execution against the trust estate in respect of a judgment against the trustee. There is no evidence of any security on any part of this estate. There was only an ordinary contract for goods supplied to a person who happened to be a trustee. . . . It is, therefore, impossible to compare the case of Ex parte, Garland (12) and In re Johnson (13), and other cases where there has been an express direction by the testator to carry on a business and where he specially appropriated part of his property for that purpose. Those authorities proceed on this principle that where a particular part of a trust estate is specifically dedicated to a particular purpose and the trustee though personally liable for the debts which he contracts in the course of the business has a right to be paid out of the specific assets appropriated for that purpose, and the trade creditors are not to be disappointed of payment so far as the assets so appropriated are concerned. But the authorities tend to limit that doctrine rather than to extend it. The case of Ex parte, Garland (12) shows that the creditor can only have recourse to the particular part of the property of which there has been an express dedication; and the right cannot be extended beyond that either in bankruptcy or in administration. And that applies even to cases in which the trustee has done his duty in carrying on the business, and where he may be entitled to an indemnity for the expenses incurred by him. In re German Mining Co. (14) and Labouchere v. Tupper (4), are cases in which the distinction is laid down between the rights of trustees carrying on business to be indemnified for expenses bona fide incurred where there are no particular assets appropriated and the rights of creditors. Under such circumstances the creditors have no rights against the trust estate."

The second case was In re Johnson, Sheerman v. Robinson (13). In that case Jessel, M. R. laid down that:

"Where a trader has by his will directed his executor or trustee to carry on his trade and to employ a specific portion of the trust estate for the purpose the rule is that though the executor or trustee is personally liable for debts incurred by him in carrying it on pursuant to the will he has the right to resort for his indemnity to the specific assets so directed to be employed, but no further; and consequently the creditors of the trade are entitled to stand in the place of the executor and trustee and to claim the benefit of that right, so as to obtain payment of their debts; but the rule does not apply where the executor or trustee is in default to the specific trust estate devoted to the trade: in such a case the defaulting executor or trustee not being himself entitled to an indemnity except upon terms of making good his default the creditors are in no better position and are, therefore, not entitled to have their debts paid out of the specific assets unless the default is made good."

The third case is that of Raybould v. Turner (15), in which the beneficiaries being parties to the proceeding the creditors were allowed to claim the benefit of the trustee's right to an indemnity so as to enable them to obtain payment of their debts out of the trust estate. In that case Byrne, J., expressed himself thus:

"Bennet v. Wyndham (16) goes to show that if a trustee in the course of the ordinary management of the testator's estate, either by himself or his agent does some act whereby some third person is injured and that third person recovers damages against the trustee in an action, the trustee if he has acted with due diligence reasonably, is entitled to be indemnified out of the testator's estate. When once the trustee is entitled to be thus indemnified out of his trust estate, I cannot myself see why the person who has recovered judgment against the trustee should not have the benefit of this right to indemnity and go direct against the trust estate or assets, as the case may be, as an ordinary creditor of a business carried on by a trustee or executor has been allowed to do."

The case of In the matter of M. A. Shard (10) was approved of in the case of Bride v. Madden (17) and it was held that the creditor who supplied goods to a trustee authorized to carry on business is entitled to the trustee's right of indemnity if the trustee has not through his default lost that right.

In In re Evans, Evans v. Evans (18), Cotton, L. J. (Lindley, L. J., agreeing) observed thus:

"A trader dies and his personal representative carries on his business. Whether the representative carries it on with or without, a person with whom he contracts a debt has no remedy against the assets, though an executor, if he had carried on the business in accordance with his duty, has a right to be indemnified out of them. Here the widow of an intestate took out Letters of Administration and continued his business, thinking to it be for the benefit of herself and her child. She incurred debts for the purpose of the business and the persons who supplied her with goods claim first against her and then against the goods. . . . The goods now in question were acquired for the purposes of the business and went into the business. The infant child of the intestate claims them as belonging to the estate, and in my opinion he has a right so to claim them subject to the right of the widow to be indemnified out of them against all claims in respect of them so far as she has not lost such right by being a debtor to the estate, and whether she has lost that right is a question depending on the result of the general account."

In Dowse v. Gorton (19), it was held that the creditor of the executor or trustee is entitled, in cases where any part of the estate is authorized to be applied for carrying out a business specified in the will, to the benefit of the indemnity which the executor or trustee is entitled to. In that case Lord Herschell observed thus:—

"I think it is clear that where a business has been carried on under such an authority as was conferred upon the executors by the will of this testator, they would be entitled to a general indemnity as against all persons claiming under the will."

In the case of In re East London County and West Minister Banking Company v. East (20), where certain creditors of a testator's estate protested against a business which the executors were carrying on ostensibly under a direction contained in the will, Swinfen Eady, L. J., said:

"There can be no question that apart from the creditors of the testator who were in a special position by reason of their having assented to or acquiesced in or associated themselves with the executor's carrying on of the testator's business or otherwise being in such a position as that business is to be deemed to have been carried on with their consent and for their benefit as was the case in the House of Lords in Dowse v. Gorton (19) every other creditor was entitled to say that as against him the executors could not justify the carrying on of the testator's business for the period of three years that they did. Whatever right therefore the executors may have to an indemnity as between themselves and the beneficiaries, they had no such right as against the creditors."

From the cases cited above the proposition may be deduced that whatever differences there may be in the equity in favour of a creditor who has lent money to an executor, according as it is applied for a purpose sanctioned by the will or a purpose not expressly sanctioned by it, the highest right that such a creditor may claim against the estate on the finding that it has been enriched or benefited by the money is a right to be subrogated to the right of the executor to be indemnified out of the estate to the necessary extent and unless the right of the executor to the indemnity is established the creditor has none as against the estate. We are speaking here of simple cases of loans on promissory notes or hatchittas or other contracts, that is to say, cases where no charge has validly been created on the estate. There are a few other cases of the Indian Courts that may now be usefully cited in support of this proposition. In 2 Ind. Cas. 161 Byramji Rustomji v. Heerabai (21), the creditor was only subrogated to the right of the executor and was not allowed to attach the estate though he had lent the money to pay off a debt due by the testator, Scott, C. J., observing

"It is clear that on a claim for money lent to executors they are liable personally and a judgment cannot be directed against the assets of the testator."

In 38 Ind. Cas. 172 Swaminatha Aiyar v. Srinivasa Aiyar (22), a case, in which a trustee of a temple had not signed the promissory note in question as manager, it was held that where money is lent or goods sold to a trustee on his own personal security, though for purposes of the trust, the creditor cannot realize the debt out of the trust property, and that the fact that the money was utilized for the benefit of the trust will not entitle the creditor to a decree charging the amount due against the trust property. In 43 Ind. Cas. 760 Ammalu Ammal v. Namagiri Ammal (23), in which case an executrix borrowed money for paying for certain legacies due from the testator's estate and executed a promissory note to which she affixed her signature without adding any description of herself as executrix and without mentioning in the promissory note the purpose of the loan, while both the learned Judges held that the creditor could not proceed against the estate and that his only remedy was to be subrogated to the rights of the executrix against the estate, they differed on the question whether, in view of the frame of the plaint, an inquiry into the question of the indebtedness of the estate to the executrix or of its liability to indemnify her could not be ordered. In the case of 43 Ind. Cas. 865, Chidambaram Pillai v. Veerappa Chettiar (24), where an executor executed a promissory note describing himself as executor and it was sought to bind the estate in a suit based on it, it was held that the estate was not liable.

On behalf of the appellant it has been contended that the three decisions upon which the Court below has relied and other cases generally in which a similar view as regards the limited rights of the creditor has been taken, have overlooked the difference that exists between the powers of an executor under the law in India as compared to what they are in English Law. It has been argued that under the Indian Law the estate vests in the executor, and that he represents the estate for all purposes and is very much in the position of an owner and that for that and other reasons the principles of English Law on which the decisions aforesaid rest should not be held to apply to this country. We think it is now too late to raise a contention of this character, even if it be conceded that there is any substance in it. It is true that the estate vests in the executor, that he represents it for all purposes and is much in the position of an owner, but then all that is so simply to enable him to do the acts which the will authorizes him to do, and to exercise those powers and discharge those duties which the law vests in him. The powers of an executor are detailed in Chap. VI, and his duties in Chap. VII, Probate and Administration Act, 1881; there is nothing in the provisions contained in these two chapters authorizing him to borrow money for the purposes of the estate. It is not suggested that the will of defendant No. 1 gave her any such power. It is quite true that it is one of the primary duties of an executor to preserve the estate and to see that its Government revenue is paid, and should he have to find money for that purpose he is entitled to be indemnified to the fullest extent.

He may dispose of the estate if he finds it necessary to do so in order to effectuate the general purposes of the will and there can be no good reason why in the exercise of a sound discretion he may not raise money by partial sale or mortgage of the assets: see Bazayet Hossain v. Dooli Chand (25). But we cannot hold that if he takes a loan and pledges his credit only, even though as an executor, he can bind the estate for its repayment, unless it is shown that he has not lost his right to be indemnified out of the assets of the estate. The appellant has also argued that a decree against the estate would be justified on the footing of s. 70, Contract Act, or on some principle analogous to what is enunciated in that section. We are unable to agree in this contention. On behalf of the respondent our attention has been drawn to s. 29, Negotiable Instruments Act, and certain cases decided under that section. We do not consider it necessary to discuss those cases because that section, which deals with the question of the extent of the limits of the personal liability of the person signing the promissory note, in our opinion, has no real bearing on the question that we are considering, namely, the question of the liability of the estate or of its owner. The cases cited merely lay this down that executors are personally liable on promissory notes executed by them as such even though they may be acting for the benefit of the testator's estate in doing so, unless their liability is excluded in the manner provided in s. 29 of the Act: see, e. g., K Subbarayudu v. K. Subbanna (26).

In giving a resume of the cases which we have considered relevant to the question of the liability of defendant No. 2 or of the estate, we have omitted to refer to those cases in which creditors who lent moneys to guardians of infants or the managing members of joint families or heads of religious endowments have or have not been allowed to be subrogated to the indemnity which such guardians, managing members or heads of religious endowments may have against the respective estates. We do not refer to those cases because they obviously stand on a very different footing from the present case. Some argument has been addressed to us to hold the estate liable on the footing that defendant No. 1 contracted the loan as guardian of the infant, defendant No. 2, and reliance for this argument was placed upon a provision, which the will is alleged to contain, namely, that the properties should remain under the management of defendant No. 1 until the adopted son (i. e., defendant No. 2) attained majority. This provision, by itself, in our opinion, would not constitute defendant No. 1 guardian of defendant No. 2. Moreover the case was not presented in the trial Court in that aspect and very different considerations, dependent on investigation into facts on different lines would have arisen if it had been so presented.

The above being the state of the authorities on the question indicated above, our conclusion is that in view of the fact that in the present case the executrix, defendant No. 1, had executed the promissory notes as such executrix and that the loans were taken for the benefit of the estate and there being a strong presumption arising out of the non-production by the defendants of the account books that had been called for on behalf of the plaintiff that the estate was really benefited by the loans and that the plaintiff, far from asking for a decree against the executrix only in her personal capacity, had in the plaint as originally filed impleaded all the necessary parties and had asked for a decree against all the defendants binding the estate, he should not be debarred from the remedy which the law allows him. It is quite true that it was not specifically pleaded in the plaint that he was entitled to be substituted to the indemnity which defendant No. 1 had against the estate; but that is only a formal defect seeing that the prayer for relief against all the defendants and against the estate was there. Defendant No. 2 understood quite well that it was the indemnity to which the plaintiff desired to be subrogated as is evident from the passages from the written statement quoted above.

(25) 4 C. 402; 5 I. A. 211; 3 Sar. 853; 3 Ind. Jur. 121 (P. C.).

(26) 85 Ind. Cas. 457; A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 371 affirmed on appeal 92 Ind. Cas. 805; A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 390.

We accordingly feel no hesitation in ordering a further trial of the suit to determine the question whether defendant No. 1 has lost her right to the indemnity, or, in other words, to what extent, if any she is entitled to be indemnified out of the estate. Defendant No. 2, who pleaded that defendant No. 1 had lost that right, has given no proof of this allegation at all. In going into this question the Court below will have to take such evidence as the parties may choose to adduce and then to direct an investigation into the accounts to be held by a Commissioner appointed for the purpose, should that course be also necessary, due regard being had to the circumstance that defendant No. 1 has been discharged from her position as executrix apparently without any liability to the estate which is now in the hands of defendant No. 2. On the result of this further trial and investigation the court below will consider what should be the proper decree to be passed in the case.

In conclusion, we desire to observe that it would be very necessary for the court below to be astute enough to see that as a result of collusion between defendant No. 1 and defendant No. 2, about which some complaint has been made before us, the plaintiff may not be placed in a position making it impossible for him to show that defendant No. 1's right to indemnify has not been lost. Necessary presumptions will have to be drawn if defendant No. 2 persists in the non-production of the books of accounts and other papers which have not been produced by defendant No. 3 or by himself so far. And the allegations that defendant No. 2 made in the several paragraphs of his written statements will be matters for him to substantiate.

The result is that the appeal is allowed, and the decree passed by the Court below in so far as it has dismissed the suit against defendant No. 2 being set aside, the suit is remanded to the Court below to be tried further in accordance with the observations made and directions given above.

Costs of this appeal will abide the result of the remand.

Civil Rule No. 313 of 1931.

PETITIONER

versus

KAILASH CHANDRA AND OTHERS—

—OPPOSITE PARTIES

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 26 F, 26-J. —Sale of occupancy—Landlord's right to pre-empt—Exercise of right before payment of transfer fee and compensation, legality of—Simultaneous applications under ss. 26-F and 26-J, propriety of.

Under s. 26-J, cl. (3), Bengal Tenancy Act, the application under s. 26-J must first be made in order to make the provisions of s. 26-F applicable to a case to which the provisions of cl. (1) s. 26-J applies, but this does not mean that the landlord is not competent to exercise his right of purchase under s. 26-F until the balance of the landlord's transfer fee and compensation allowed have been paid.

Applications under ss. 26-J and 26-F can be made at the same time.

Civil Rule against an order of the Munsif, Second Court, Khulna, dated the 22nd December, 1930.

Mr. Hemendra Chandra Sen, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Bijan Kumar Mukerji, for the Opposite Parties.

Judgment.—This rule has been issued calling upon the opposite party to show cause why an order of the Munsif, Second Court at Khulna, under ss. 25 J and 26 F should not be set aside on the ground that an application under s. 24-F must follow an application under s. 26-J and that the application under s. 25 F cannot be made until after the balance of the landlord's fees and compensation have been paid into Court as provided by s. 26-C read with s. 26-J.

The contention of the petitioner depends upon the interpretation of s. 26 J, cl. (3). That clause states:

"The provision of s. 26-F shall apply to the case of a transfer referred to in sub-s. (1) and the immediate landlord shall be competent to exercise his rights of purchase under that section within two months of the date of payment into Court of the balance of the landlord's transfer fee and the compensation allowed."

The petitioner is right in holding that the application under s. 26-J must first be made in order to make the provisions of s. 26-F applicable to a case to which the provisions of cl. (1), s. 26 J. applies. But he is not right in urging that the landlord is not competent to exercise his rights of purchase under s. 26 F until the balance of the landlord's transfer fee and compensation allowed have been paid. Such an interpretation of the section would mean that if the balance of the landlord's transfer fee and compensation are not paid the landlord would not be competent to pre-empt under s. 26-F and that in any case he has got to wait until the tenant chooses to pay the balance of the landlord's transfer fee. The position of the landlord in such a case would be much worse than that of the landlord whose tenant makes a bona fide transfer. This cannot be the intention of the Legislature. Obviously, this portion of cl (3), s. 26-J is merely a provision fixing the time within which the landlord may apply to pre-empt. The provisions of limitation in s. 26-F would not apply in this case (no notices having been issued under s. 26 O or 26-E) thus making it necessary to provide a special period of limitation in the case in which an application is made by the landlord under s. 26 J. It has also been pointed out that this point was not at all raised in the court below. The judgment of the court below shows that application was made at the same time under ss. 26 and 26 F and there seems to be no reason why this should not be allowed. This being the only ground on which this Rule was granted this Rule is discharged with costs: hearing fee one gold mohur.

OPPOSITE PARTIES.

Contempt of Court—Pleadings—Duty of complainant to allege grounds specifically—Affidavits—Source of information not disclosed—Value of statements.

In proceedings for contempt the practice of the court is to enable the parties concerned to know what are the points they have got to answer and the practice has always been that the parties charged with contempt cannot be called upon to answer to anything which is not set out specifically in the grounds used before the court at the time when the Rule was issued.

The fact that the grounds are matters of record and that a Rule has been issued is immaterial. [p. 902, col. 2.]

The court should not take any notice whatsoever of matters which are stated to be true to information but in respect of which the source of the information is not disclosed. [p. 902, col. 1.]

Messrs. N. K. Basu, Girja Prosanna Sanyal and J. N. Sanyal, for the Petitioner.

Judgment.—This is a Rule calling upon four persons named Satish Chandra Giri, Probbat Giri, Narendra Samanta and Gobordhone Kamle to show cause why they should not be committed for contempt. The circumstances under which the present Rule came to be issued, shortly stated, are as follows: It appears that some time in February 1930 the Receiver of the admittedly debuttar estate attached to the Tarakeswar temple made an application to the District Judge of Hooghly praying that proceedings in contempt might be taken against the above-named persons inasmuch as they had been attempting to impede and stultify the administration by the Receiver of the debuttar estate by resorting to improper and unlawful means and artifices, as they had been guilty of direct illegal obstruction offered to the officers in the discharge of their lawful duties, as they had used criminal force and criminal intimidation under the circumstances stated in the petition or report of the Receiver and as they had been guilty of offering insults and threats to the Receiver and the officers under him. The District Judge thereupon issued notices upon the persons concerned and called upon them to show cause why they should not be proceeded against in contempt.

A number of witnesses were examined before the District Judge on the side of the Receiver as also on the side of the persons concerned and a number of records from the Magisterial and other courts were admitted in evidence, and finally the District Judge came to the conclusion on 9th January 1931 after a prolonged inquiry that it has been established to his satisfaction that the persons concerned had been guilty of various acts of contempt. He thereupon referred the matter to this court for taking such proceedings against the said persons as this court thought proper under the provisions of Act XII of 1926. The matter came before my learned brothers, Lord-William, J. and S. K. Ghose, J., who were then presiding over the Criminal Bench and which Bench had been authorized by the learned Chief Justice to deal with and dispose of the reference made by the District Judge of Hooghly. The learned Judges came to the conclusion that a Rule had to be issued upon the persons concerned and that such Rule should be issued on the petition or report of the Receiver made to the District Judge and the affidavit in support thereof. They expressed the view that one of the parties to the litigation should have moved in the matter, but, inasmuch as that had not been done, they thought it expedient in the circumstances appearing before them to issue a Rule on the report or petition of the Receiver to the District Judge treating the same as if it was a petition to this court. That Rule has now come on for hearing before us.

We have examined such portions of the record as have been brought to our notice. It is quite clear that the only allegations which Satish Chandra Giri and the three other persons named above are called upon to answer are the allegations made in the petition or report of the Receiver to the District Judge which petition or report was treated as if it was a petition to this court and the affidavit in support thereof. Confining ourselves therefore to the grounds upon which the present Rule has been issued and which are the only grounds that the opposite Parties are called upon to answer, it is to be observed that the affidavit in support of the report or petition of the Receiver is singularly lacking in precision.

So far as paras A and B are concerned, it is no doubt stated in the affidavit that the said paragraphs refer to matters of record and that the same are true to the knowledge of the deponent, namely, the Receiver; but, as regards paras. C and D, it may be stated at once that we cannot take any notice whatsoever of the matters mentioned in para. D because the affidavit says that the matters mentioned therein are true to the information of the deponent. The source of the information is not disclosed and, as is laid down in various cases, we are unable to take any notice whatsoever of matters which are stated to be true to information but in respect of which the source of the information is not disclosed. As regards para C, it is stated that the earlier portion of the paragraph is true to information.

The remarks we have just made as regards para. D apply to the same, but we have not been able to make out what are the earlier paragraphs which are referred to nor has Mr. Basu who appears in support of the present Rule been able to enlighten us as to which portions of para. C are referred to in the affidavit in question. The result therefore is that the petitioner on whose petition the present Rule has been issued must be limited to grounds A and B.

As regards grounds A and B, it is true that certain matters of record have been referred to, but the position is that those matters of record have been set out in such a manner as to justify the conclusion that the opposite parties have not been able to know with any amount of precision the particular acts of contempt with which they are charged in the petition. In cases of this nature, as is well-known, the practice of the court is to enable the parties concerned to know what are the points they have got to answer in a charge of contempt and the practice has always been that the opposite parties, namely, the parties charged with contempt cannot be called upon to answer to anything which is not set out specifically in the grounds used before the court at the time when the Rule was issued. The relevant practice and procedure are set out in the Annual Practice and there is no doubt whatsoever that, in matters of this nature, the court has to proceed very carefully and cautiously. The liberty of the subject is concerned and it is not enough that, because a Rule has been issued therefore the Rule has got to be determined in only one particular manner without the court examining the grounds on which the Rule has been issued. We are of opinion that the grounds in this case are insufficient and in the circumstances the only course that is left open to us is to discharge the present Rule.

Nothing that we have said will prevent any of the parties to the litigation which is the subject-matter of an appeal to this court at the present moment to move and apply for suitable orders, should they be so advised.

Mr. H. D. Bose on behalf of the Mohunt asked for costs. But in the circumstances we are of opinion that there should be no order for costs.

ANOTHER—OPPOSITE PARTIES.

Bengal Municipal Act (III of 1884), s. 202—Applicability to Howrah—Calcutta Municipal Act (III of 1899), s. 342, effect of.

Section 202, Bengal Municipal Act, was not repealed so far as Howrah was concerned when in 1904, the Government extended s. 342 of the then Calcutta Municipal Act, III of 1899, to Howrah, and consequently there is no foundation for the suggestion that by reason of the non-existence of s. 242 in the present Calcutta Municipal Act, s. 202 must be considered to have been revived. [p. 904, vol. 2.]

What was done at the time when the latter section was extended to Howrah was to clothe the Municipality of Howrah with the summary or dictatorial powers which the Legislature thought fit to confer upon the Chairman of the Corporation of Calcutta in addition to the powers which the Municipality already had under s. 202, Bengal Municipal Act. [p. 904, col. 1.]

Criminal Reference made by the District Magistrate, Howrah.

Messrs. Monmotho Nath Roy and Surya Mukar Aich for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Haradhan Chatterjee and Apurbadhan Mukherjee for the Opposite Parties.

Judgment.—Reference No. 90. This is a reference by the District Magistrate of Howrah under the following circumstances: It appears that there is a person named Bal Govinda Tewari who has erected a tin shed in Pandit Ghat Road within the Municipality of Howrah and has thereby been guilty of an encroachment on the public road. The Municipality through their Sub-overseer R. K. Roy lodged a complaint under s. 202, Bengal Municipal Act, III (B. O.) of 1884, which runs as follows:

"The Commissioners may issue a notice requiring any person to remove any wall which he may have built, or any fence, rail, post or other obstruction or encroachment, which he may have erected in or on any road or open drain, sewer or aqueduct, after the date on which the District Municipal Improvement Act, 1864, or the District Towns Act, 1868, or the Bengal Municipal Act, 1876, as the case may be took effect in the Municipality; or, in case none of the said Acts was in force in the Municipality before the commencement of this Act, then after the date on which this Act may have been extended thereto; and if such person shall fail to comply with such requisition within eight days of the same, the Magistrate may on the application of the Commissioners, order that such obstruction or encroachment be removed; and thereupon the Commissioners may remove any such obstruction or encroachment; and the expenses thereby incurred shall be paid by the person who erected the same.

No person shall be entitled to compensation in respect of the removal of any wall, fence, rail, post or other obstruction under this section."

The Magistrate before whom the matter came, came to the conclusion that s. 202, Bengal Municipal Act, so far as Howrah was concerned, had been repealed when in 1904 the Local Government by a notification in the Calcutta Gazette extended s. 342 of the then Calcutta Municipal Act III (B. O.) of 1899 to Howrah. The Magistrate had his attention drawn to the fact that s. 342 of the then Calcutta Municipal Act was no longer existent—the present Calcutta Municipal Act, not containing that section. The question then arose as to whether having regard to the fact that s. 242, Calcutta Municipal Act III (B. O.) of 1899 was not incorporated in the present Calcutta Municipal Act and s. 300 of the present Calcutta Municipal Act was not extended to Howrah, s. 202, Bengal Municipal Act, which according to the Magistrate, had been repealed by the extension of s. 342, Calcutta Municipal Act III (B. O.) of 1899 was revived. The Magistrate came to the conclusion that s. 202, Bengal Municipal Act, had not been revived. The matter attracted the notice of the District Magistrate and he has made a reference to this court for the determination of the questions: (1) whether s. 202, Bengal Municipal Act, so far as Howrah is concerned has been repealed; and (2) what is the present state of the law having regard to the fact that s. 342, Calcutta Municipal Act III (B. O.) of 1899, is non-existent so far as Howrah is concerned.

It will be seen from the language of s. 202, Bengal Municipal Act, that the Legislature gave power to the Commissioners of a Municipality to "issue a notice requiring any person to remove any wall which he may have built, or any fence, rail, post or other obstruction or encroachment, which he may have erected in or on any road or open drain, sewer" etc. . . . "and if such person shall fail to comply with such requisition within eight days of the receipt of the same, the Magistrate may, on the application of the Commissioners, order that such obstruction or encroachment be removed; and thereupon the Commissioners may remove any such obstruction or encroachment; and the expenses thereby incurred shall be paid by the persons who erected the same."

Section 242, Calcutta Municipal Act, III (B. O.) of 1899, gave power to the Chairman of the Calcutta Corporation and, after the extension of the said section to Howrah, to the Commissioners of the Municipality of Howrah or the Executive of the Howrah Municipality to "remove any wall, fence rail, post, platform or other obstruction, projection or encroachment (not being a fixture referred to in s. 341) which has been erected or set up and any materials or goods which have been deposited in a public street or in or over any drain or aqueduct in a public street, whether the offender be prosecuted or not.

The section goes on to say:

"When the Chairman removes any wall or other obstruction, projection or encroachment from land which forms part of a public street, no compensation shall be payable, but the General Committee shall be bound to provide proper means of access to and from the street if none exist already."

It will be seen from a comparison of the two sections, namely s. 202, Bengal Municipal Act, and s. 342, Calcutta Municipal Act, I.I(B. C.) of 1899 that what was done at the time when the latter section was extended to Howrah was to clothe the Municipality of Howrah with the summary or dictatorial powers which the Legislature thought fit to confer upon the Chairman of the Corporation of Calcutta in addition to the powers which the Municipality already had under s. 202, Bengal Municipal Act. Doubtless, there were reasons which were sufficient to satisfy the Local Government that such additional powers, having regard to the state of things within the Municipality of Howrah, were necessary from the point of view of the conservancy in Howrah and for other considerations. But, because in addition to the powers conferred by s. 202, Bengal Municipal Act, additional summary powers having the same objective without recourse to a Magistrate were conferred upon the Municipality, it does not follow that s. 202, Bengal Municipal Act was repealed. It is said that the Howrah Municipal Manual issued by the Howrah Municipality suggests that s. 202 ceased to have any operation from and after 1904 when s. 342, Calcutta Municipal Act, 1899, was extended to Howrah. We have looked into the Municipal Manual and beyond the suggestion made by somebody who was charged with the duty of compiling the Manual that one section corresponded with the other there is nothing whatever in the said book to suggest that s. 202 was repealed in 1904 and ceased to have any operation from and after that date.

It is said that s. 342, Calcutta Municipal Act, 1899, shows that when one of the provisions of the then Calcutta Municipal Act was extended to another Municipality the corresponding section in the Bengal Municipal Act must be taken to have been repealed and that its operation must have ceased. It all depends upon what you mean by the words "corresponding section." In our view, s. 342, of the then Calcutta Municipal Act, does not correspond to s. 202, Bengal Municipal Act. For the reasons which have already been advanced, one section prescribed the normal machinery and the other section gives the Executive of the Municipality summary powers which ordinarily would not be availed of if the normal machinery were found to be sufficient but which would only be availed of in cases where recourse to the normal procedure would involve delay or where obstruction might be anticipated from the party alleged to be guilty of encroachment. One section does not correspond to the other and there is no foundation for the suggestion that in 1904, s. 202 was repealed and consequently there is no foundation for the suggestion that by reason of the non existence of s. 342, Calcutta Municipal Act, 1899, so far as Howrah is concerned at the present moment s. 202 must be considered to have been revived. It is not a case of revival at all, there having been no case of repeal in the first instance.

For these reasons, we accept the reference made by the learned District Magistrate of Howrah and direct that the order of the trying Magistrate be set aside and the proceedings do continue against the person who was summoned as having been guilty of the encroachment referred to above.

Revision Case No. 583.

For the reasons given in our judgment in Reference No. 90 of 1931, we are of opinion that a sufficient case has been made out for our interference and we make this rule absolute.

In a case of this nature the addition of the legal personal representative is not the mere curing of some technical defect not affecting the substance of the dispute between the original parties to the action but the matter goes to the substance of the plaintiff's claim. *TUAN MAN v. Adverse Possession.

See LIMITATION ACT, 1908, SCH. I, ART. 144 254
See REGULATION ACT, 1808 69

Essentials—Independent trespassers—Tacking of possession—Cases under Arts. 142 and 144—Difference between—Onus of proof of possession within twelve years

By the expression "falls into possession" is meant the time when reversioner or a remainderman becomes entitled to the actual possession of the estate.

Unless there is a break in the continuity of possession the true owner would be barred by 12 years' adverse possession even if that continuous adverse possession be of two or more trespassers who did not claim under one another.

Where the plaintiff alleges his possession over im, movable property and dispossession by the defendant and where it is found that the possession of the plaintiff was discontinued when defendant entered into possession not as a tenant of the plaintiff but in his own rights, the article of limitation applicable to such a suit is Art. 142 and not Art. 144, Sch. I, Limitation Act.

In cases falling under Art. 142, the claimant must prove his possession within 12 years next preceding the date of the institution of the suit and in cases of that nature an enquiry into the question of adverse possession is irrelevant.

In cases falling under Art. 144 where the defence is one of title acquired by adverse possession for more than 12 years, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to prove his possession within 12 years from the commencement of the suit. MOHAMMAD AZIM KHAN v. MOHAMMAD SAADAT ALI KHAN Oudh 642

Essentials of.

To prove title to land by adverse possession for the statutory period, it is not sufficient that some acts of possession have been done; the possession required must be adequate, in continuity, in publicity and in extent to show that it is possession adverse to the competitors; the possession must be actual, physical, exclusive, hostile and continued during the time necessary to create a bar under the Statute of Limitations. *SITLA BAKSH SINGH v. the village papers and has held land for over twelve years, cannot make his possession adverse to the rightful owner. SITLA BAKSH SINGH v. SARABJIT SINGH Oudh 700

Long possession of share proved—Absence of evidence to identify such share—Effect—Burden of proof of identity of land.

Where in a suit by the plaintiff who was the recorded proprietor of a 12-annas share in a mauza for ejectment of the defendants who were entered as mokararridars in respect of four annas comprised within the said twelve annas on the ground that the entry was wrong and the defendants were mere trespassers, the defendants were found to have been in possession of some interest in the mauza for a long time but there was nothing to identify the land of which they had been in possession for so long with the four annas in dispute:

Held, that it could not be presumed that the defendants were in possession of the shares in dispute and the failure of the defendants to identify their interest with the four annas share in dispute was of itself sufficient ground for rejecting the plea of limitation and adverse possession raised by them. *SHAMA KANT LAL v. r. 1—Costs—Pleader's fees—Fees not actually paid—Mere execution of promissory note—Fees, whether taxable.

Rule 1 of Chap. I of the General Rules of the Allahabad High Court relating to Pleader's fees contemplates the actual payment and not a mere promise to pay even though such promise is evidenced by a promissory note, bond or other instrument, and, therefore, if payment of fees is not actually made to the Pleader, it could not be taxed as part of the costs incurred by the party who is alleged to have made payment. The legal aspect of the matter is not altered by the fact that the Judge had permitted payment by means of a promissory note.

Approver—Corroboration—Nature of evidence required—Corroboration as against some, effect of.

Evidence in corroboration of an accomplice's evidence must be independent testimony which affects the accused by connecting or tending to connect him with the crime. It must be evidence which implicates him, that is, which forms in some material particular not only the evidence that the crime has been committed but also that he personally committed it. The corroboration need not be direct evidence that the accused committed the crime; it is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connection with the crime.

Where there is one witness of bad character (an accomplice) giving evidence against two prisoners, a confirmation of his testimony with regard to one, is no confirmation of his testimony as to the other. If, therefore, there is a corroboration applicable to one prisoner, it may be taken as against him; but unless it exists with regard to both it would be unjust to give it a general effect. KHAIRATI RAM v. An agreement to abide by the majority of a certain number of arbitrators does not mean that the arbitration may be conducted by a majority or by less than the full number of arbitrators.

But if some of the arbitrators are absent, it is the duty of the parties to object at that time and not to allow the proceedings to go on with less than the full number of arbitrators.

If a party having a clear knowledge of the circumstances on which he might have founded an objection to the arbitrators proceeding to make their award, submits to the arbitration going on and allows the arbitrators to deal with the case as it stood before them, taking his chance of the decision being more or less favourable to himself, it is too late for him, after the award has been made, and on the application to file the award, to insist on this objection to the filing of the award.

Revision is generally objectionable in cases of awards and a Court should not interfere unless it finds not only an illegality committed but some substantial harm resulting from that illegality. LAKSHMANNA v. GOOLB APFADU Mad. 207

Where a large area is taken away from one village to another, the party claiming accretion must satisfy the Court by clear and definite evidence not only that there is a general custom of Dhurdhura, but also that such custom contemplates such far-reaching consequences as the transfer of a very large tract of recognizable land from one village to another as a result of a sudden change in the course of the river. SHEO RAM V. Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act (XI of 1859), ss. 2, 3, 13—Sale for arrears, when justified—'Arrears', meaning of—Sale of share in respect of which separate account is kept—Necessary conditions—Sale before last date—Validity.

Before liability to sale under the Bengal Revenue Sales Act attaches there must be : (1) the whole or a portion of a kist or instalment unpaid; (2) the conversion of such unpaid amount into an arrear on the first of the following month, and (3) the passing of the latest date of payment of such arrear, as fixed under s. 3 and the official notice of the Board of Revenue.

In order to justify the sale of a share in an estate in respect of which a separate account is kept, the estate must have become liable to sale for arrears of revenue, and an arrear of revenue must be due from that share according to the separate account.

By notice in the Calcutta Gazette, the date for payment of instalments of revenue and the latest dates for payment of arrears were fixed as 28th June, 28th September, 12th January, and 28th March. The Collectorate account for the third kist of 12th January, 1924, showed a credit balance of seven annas four pies on the general account of Touzi No. 10, and a debit balance of Rs. 35-2 in the separate account of No. 10-6, to the satisfaction of which the Collector appropriated sufficient of the money deposited with him in terms of s. 15 of the Act. In the accounts for the fourth kist of 28th March, the general account of Touzi No. 10 showed an unpaid balance of six annas five pies, but the separate account of share No. 10-6 showed that the sum of Rs. 20-13, being the current demand of revenue in respect of the fourth kist, had been paid on 27th March, 1924. On the 26th June, share No. 10-6 was sold for arrears :

Held, that inasmuch as the only arrear of the revenue of the estate which could be said to justify the sale was the unpaid balance of six annas five pies balance could not be considered an arrear until the first of the following month, i. e., 1st April, 1924, the latest day of payment was accordingly 28th June, 1924, two days after the sale took place—and the estate could “not become liable to sale for arrears of revenue” until after 28th June, 1924 and, therefore, the sale of share No. 10-6, was invalid on this ground alone.

Where thanadari lands have been amalgamated with the malguzari lands of the mehal so as to form one estate as defined in s. 1, Act VII of 1868 and the demands on the two heads have been amalgamated to form a total demand for the estate, one sale can be held for the arrears of revenue for malguzari lands and on account of dues for thanadari lands.

The Collector has jurisdiction under s. 20 of the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act, 1859, to adjourn a sale to the next day after selling some of the items if he cannot complete the sale of all the items before 5 P. M.

The fact that the order for adjournment was signed by the Collector at a club and not at his office cannot affect his jurisdiction or the validity of the sale.

Non-service of a notice under s. 7 of the Act, which is meant to forbid raiyats and under-tenants to pay rent to the defaulting proprietor, has no bearing on the question of, and cannot affect, the price fetched at the sale. RADHA GOBINDA DEB v. GIRIJA PRASANNA MOOKHERJEE Cal. 129

What was done at the time when the latter section was extended to Howrah was to clothe the Municipality of Howrah with the summary or dictatorial powers which the Legislature thought fit to confer upon the Chairman of the Corporation of Calcutta in addition to the powers which the Municipality already had under s. 202, Bengal Municipal Act. In the case of the latter, the right is to be exercised within a reasonable time of the knowledge of the sale.

Held, that the landlord was not precluded from claiming pre-emption under s. 26-F by reason of his agreeing to have the rent sale set aside, even though he had received notice of transfer under s. 26-C before the sale was set aside.

Slight discrepancies regarding the description of property in the application for pre-emption under s. 26-F as compared with the notice under s. 26-C cannot invalidate the application. DABIRUDDIN v. KRISHNA CHANDRA Cal. 470

Under s. 26-F, cl. In the ordinary course co-sharer landlords applying to pre-empt should be entitled to pre-empt to the extent of equal shares, but in any case a co-sharer landlord should have a share corresponding to his interest in the superior right compared with the interest of the opposite party.

If the ordinary rule of equal shares is to be departed from, it must be done on some basis or principle.

So while the decree in a rent suit ought to be regarded as a valid decree so far as the liability of the parties during the years then in suit is concerned, a decision therein that bhaoli rent is payable only in respect of certain areas cannot be treated as res judicata to determine the areas for which such rent shall be payable in subsequent years, where such decision is at variance with an earlier decision under s. 106 of the Act. *BANKEY BIHARI LAL v. Where the plea of special limitation under the Bengal Tenancy Act has been on the record from a comparatively early stage and the matter has been investigated, the Appellate Court should not set aside the question merely on the ground that it was not pleaded so early as it ought to have been.

A lease of 99 bighas of land was given to a Brahman pensioner; the patta was both mourasi and mokarrari; the landlord took a salami of one thousand rupees; no rent was payable for the first year and for some years rent was payable on an increasing scale; about 20 bighas were cultivated by the tenants themselves and about 75 bighas were cultivated by bhag-chashis. The lease provided as follows: 'You go on enjoying and possessing the said land by dwelling on the same, by cultivating it, by planting trees etc., by cutting them down, by excavating tanks, by erecting pucca buildings etc., generation after generation with power to transfer by gift, sale etc.'.

Held, that the lease was not a rayati lease.

In a suit by the plaintiffs for possession of land on the allegation that they are lessees and that they had been dispossessed by the defendant's landlords, the burden of making out the plea of special limitation is on the defendant.

The accused, a medical practitioner, was charged with keeping a common gaming house and thereby committing an offence under s. 4 (a) of the Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act. He was convicted on the evidence that on a Police raid of his dispensary, some slips of paper with names of horses with sums of money marked against some of them were found. The Police could not find betting books of any sort:

Held, (i) that if a presumption arose from the evidence under s. 7 of the Act that the house or room was used as a common gaming house, then that presumption was rebutted by the fact that nothing was found in the house to suggest that it was being used as a common gaming house;

(ii) that the documents found in the house were perfectly consistent with the persons who were there, that is the accused, being merely engaged in making private bets for their own entertainment and the total absence of any books relating to book-making showed that no business of a common gaming house was being conducted.

Putting in panchnamas signed by panchas as part of the evidence of a Police Officer is worthless except to corroborate the evidence of the officer that panchas were employed and to show that the provisions of s. 103 (1) and (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code have been complied with. RUSTAM QURESHI LAM v. There is no presumption that the inferior proprietors of a district in the Central Provinces possess the same rights and privileges which are possessed by the inferior proprietors of the other districts of the Province.

Therefore, where the inferior proprietors of a mauza claim right in respect of the village waste and forest produce, they can only succeed if they show either that they acquired their rights by custom or those rights were granted to them when the sub-settlement of the mauza was made with them or their predecessors.

Further, where there is no proof of the existence of these rights before a particular settlement, the absence of any entry in the wajib-ul-arz prepared during the settlement cannot be interpreted as a reservation of any such right. LAL INDRA SHAH v. SHEOSHANKAR P. C. 628

The Court of Wards being a trustee for the rightful owner and thus a stake-holder can file such a suit and the mere fact that no such capacity to sue or to be sued has been conferred upon the Court of Wards under s. 48 of the old Court of Wards Act does not in any way oust the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to take proceedings under s. 470, upon a plaint filed by the Court of Wards. Held, (i) that to decide whether the Munsif was entitled to try the later suit, only the value of that half which was claimed under the same cause of action, namely inheritance from S, had to be considered;

(ii) that from the value of this one-half, viz., Rs. 1,050, the value of the two plots (which exceeded Rs. 50) must be deducted and the suit would therefore, come within the jurisdiction of the Munsif and was barred by res judicata. PRIYANATH v. KALICHARAN Cal. 604

A decree pronounced in absentem by a foreign Court, to the jurisdiction of which the defendant has in no way submitted himself, is by international law an absolute nullity. He is under no obligation of any kind to obey it, and it must be regarded as a mere nullity by the Courts of every nation, except in the country of the forum by which it was pronounced.

Where a decree passed by a Court in a Native State against a British subject who did not reside in that State, is sought to be executed in British India, it is open to the defendant to object to its execution on the ground that the decree, being one against an absent foreigner who had not submitted to the jurisdiction of the Court, is a nullity.

Section 44, Civil Procedure Code, merely lays down the method of procedure for the execution of decrees passed by Courts in certain Native States as to which there is a Notification by the Governor-General-in-Council. There is nothing in the section which compels the British Indian Court to execute a decree transferred to it by a Native State Court even if it is satisfied that the decree was passed without jurisdiction.

The submission to the jurisdiction must be to the foreign Court itself and probably before the judgment is pronounced; for if there was no such submission, the judgment is a nullity. But appearance in the British Court may amount to waiver independently of this rule.

Where such a decree was sought to be executed in British India and the moveable properties of the debtor were attached and the latter paid a certain sum of money and took time:

Held, (i) that the mere fact that the amount was deposited in part payment of the decree or that time was taken for the payment of the balance would not amount to an adjudication of the rights of the parties by the Court so as to operate as res judicata against the judgment-debtor in all subsequent proceedings, even though they arise out of a fresh transfer of the execution and relate to an entirely different set of properties;

—s. 39, O. XXI, r. 46—Attachment of debt—Jurisdiction of Court—Conditions—Want of jurisdiction—Validity of sale—Procedure—Debt, location of—Insurance policy, attachment of.

The invalidity or absence of attachment would not invalidate a sale inasmuch as an order of attachment is only a prohibitory order issued on the judgment-debtor and the public in order to protect the decree-holder.

But if a property cannot be attached being outside the jurisdiction of a Court it can neither be sold by that Court.

It is not competent in execution of a decree for money to attach at the instance of the decree-holder a debt payable to the judgment-debtor outside the jurisdiction by a person not resident within the jurisdiction of that Court.

The proper procedure in such cases is to transfer the decree for execution to the Court which has jurisdiction to attach the debt.

It makes no difference so far as the consideration of the present question is concerned as to where the money is payable.

The location of a debt is where the debtor resides. HARI DAS v. NATIONAL INSURANCE CO. Cal. 533

The term 'agriculturist' is used in s. 60 (c), Civil Procedure Code, to denote a person making his living by tilling the soil, in other words, whose sole means of livelihood is gained by cultivating land and does not necessarily mean a person who works with his hands. It includes a small holder of the land who tills the soil but not a large landed proprietor even though his sole income is derived from land.

—s. 92—'Trust and trustees,' meaning of—'Public,' meaning of—Trust not admitted—Application of section—Necessary parties in suit under section—Suit for removal of trustees, maintainability of.

The words 'trust' and 'trustees' in s. 92, Civil Procedure Code, have been used in their ordinary sense and not in any technical sense as used in English Law or in the technical sense in which the word wakf is used in Muhammadan Law. Section 92 contemplates that there is a property burdened with obligations for purposes of a charitable or religious nature. It will apply in all cases whether wakf or not where there is a clear indication that there is an obligation annexed to the property in favour of religious or charitable objects of a public nature.

The word 'public' in s. 92, Civil Procedure Code, means a section of the public and it is beyond dispute that provisions of maintenance of khankah and for distribution of alms and charities etc. are objects of a public nature within the meaning of the section.

In a suit under s. 92, Civil Procedure Code, only the trustee is a necessary party.

Section 92, Civil Procedure Code, applies even when the trust is not admitted and the very existence of the trust is in dispute.

Where there is a breach of trust a suit for declaration that there is a trust and for the preparation of a scheme or removal of the trustees is maintainable only under s. 92, Civil Procedure Code. SHAH MUHAMMAD v. ABI SAGHIR Pat. 417

A preliminary decree was passed in a suit for sale on a mortgage. Subsequently the mortgagee found out that by a mistake a wrong survey number had been entered in the mortgage deed and the mistake was repeated in the plaint as also in the preliminary decree. The mortgagee sued for rectification of the deed of mortgage and also of the plaint and the preliminary decree in respect of the mistaken survey number. It appeared that as a matter of fact there had been a common mistake on the point by both parties:

Held, (i) that to attack by a 2nd suit the decree in a previous suit between the same parties would offend against the principle of res judicata which admits of exception only in cases where the previous decree was a compromise decree or a decree obtained by fraud of the other party and that consequently rectification of the mortgage-deed could not be granted.

(ii) that in proper cases the Court could grant rectification of a mortgage-deed which has ripened into a decree and that the limits after which rectification of an instrument should not be made are (a) the limit stated in s. 31, Specific Relief Act, when 3rd parties have acquired rights in good faith and for value and (b) where a decree has been obtained on an unrectified instrument and that decree has been executed and money or property concerned has been recovered.

(iii) that after getting their mortgage-deed rectified and then amending their plaint the decree-holder then could apply for review or amendment of the preliminary decree under s. 152, Civil Procedure Code.

Per Ananthakrishna Ayyar, J.—The circumstance that a decree has been passed on a mortgage is not by itself a legal bar to such rectification being granted when otherwise a case for rectification is made out. UPADRASTA LATCHAYYA v. GUDAPARTI SRETHAMMA

The plaintiffs and defendant No. 2 were partners in a firm of which the latter was the managing partner. He agreed on behalf of the firm to sell certain land belonging to the firm to defendant No. 1 and entered the transaction in the books of the firm as being a contract to sell the land for Rs. 9,000. The actual agreement for sale was for Rs. 5,000. Subsequently the partnership dissolved and the terms of dissolution were embodied in a deed and the effect of dissolution was that the plaintiffs took over the whole of the partnership assets, the accounts were to be taken as correct, and if it was found that any entry was wrong, the partner in default was to make good the loss to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs sued for specific performance of the agreement of sale, stating in the plaint that if the sale price was Rs. 9,000 the defendant No. 1 was bound to pay Rs. 9,000 and purchase the land. If on the other hand the price fixed was Rs. 5,000 then they claimed against defendant No. 1 specific performance or that basis and as against defendant No. 2 the balance of Rs. 4,000 under the contract of indemnity contained in the deed of dissolution. The Sub-Judge dismissed the suit on ground of misjoinder of causes of action:

Held, that there was no misjoinder of causes of action as there was a common question of fact, namely, what were the terms of the contract of sale.

—O. I, r. 8—Suit against representative defendants, when competent—Debt incurred by managers of community—Suit against managers—Permission for defendants to be sued as representatives.

As a general rule a suit against representative defendants cannot be brought upon a debt, as it is not possible to proceed against the common property unless all those who possess an interest in the property are actually made parties to the suit. But this rule does not apply to a case in which managers or trustees or some other persons whom the plaintiff alleges have power to bind the property of the association or community are before the Court. Thus, where a promissory-note is executed by five persons and the holder of the note sues them alleging that they are managers appointed by their community with powers of borrowing and dealing with common property and that the common property is bound by the debt, an order under O. I, r. 8 permitting the defendants to be sued as representative of the community is competent. ANDIAPPAN AMBALAM v. SUBBAYYA AMBALAM Mad. 315

The rule that substituted service is to be taken to be as effectual as personal service only means that the court hearing the case may proceed with the suit as if the summons had been personally served on the defendant. Therefore, when an order for substituted service is made by a court on the representation of plaintiff, it is open to the defendant when he makes an application for setting aside ex parte decree to challenge the propriety of the order and to show that the method employed was not calculated to effect the purpose, namely of informing the defendant of the institution of the suit. The fact that a Managing Director has a preponderating voice in the company by reason of his owning or controlling a large number of shares or that the dividends have not been paid regularly is by itself no reason for winding-up a company.

To justify a winding-up order on the 'just and equitable rule' it is necessary to prove a lack of confidence in the conduct and management of the company's affairs by the Directors.

An order for winding-up a company even if not justified may be maintained on the ground of lapse of time and intervening events.

An ultra vires transaction on the part of Directors is of itself not sufficient reason for a winding-up order since other remedies are available to aggrieved share-holders.

Where the Directors of a company intend to appeal against a winding-up order they should prefer the appeal in the company's name even though an Official Liquidator has in the meanwhile been appointed by the Court. If the majority of the contributories concur in the filing of such appeal the appeal is in truth that of the contributories.

In the winding-up of a solvent company the Court as well as the Official Liquidator should have particular regard to the wishes of the contributories in all matters affecting them as a class.

An Official Liquidator must maintain a position of complete impartiality between all persons involved in the winding-up. Where this is not done the Judge in charge of the winding-up may remove such Liquidator and appoint in his place a person from whom an attitude of unqualified detachment can be expected. *RIPON KRISH & SUGAR MILL Co., LTD. v. Company—Directors, appointment of—Poll, demand of—Poll not taken—Original meeting, continuance of—Suit by share-holders for declaration that appointment of Directors is invalid, competency of.

The Directorate of a Life Insurance Company was composed of two policy-holders' Directors elected by the policy-holders and of a certain number of share-holders' Directors. The Ordinary General Meeting for the election of share-holders' Directors was fixed for the 13th October, 1930. The Articles of Association had contained a provision that the number of share-holders' Directors should be six and that two should retire in rotation their places being filled by election at the meeting. But the number had been by amendment of the articles reduced to five and it was provided as a special case, that at the General Meeting of 1930 the six Directors should vacate office and that no more than five should be elected in place of them. At the meeting held on 13th October, 1930, votes were taken by show of hands and five persons were declared elected. A poll was then demanded and the Chairman then directed that it should be held at the Company's Office on 20th October, and appointed the manager of the Company Returning Officer for the purpose of taking it. On October 16th the two policy-holders' Directors appointed two other persons thus bringing the Directors up to four. On the 20th October the Returning Officer did not appear and no other arrangement being made for holding the poll, the share holders who had assembled dispersed. No other attempt was made to take a poll and the four persons at that time claiming to be Directors after a couple of days co-opted 3 more Directors, thus bringing their number up to the maximum. Four of the share-holders filed a suit praying inter alia that these appointments might be declared invalid and that the Court should direct a poll to be taken to elect the five share-holders' Directors:

Held, that the taking of a poll was a mere enlargement of the meeting at which it was demanded and the original meeting continued until the poll had been taken.

Held, further, that so long as the meeting continued the five Directors' posts remained vacant and neither the provision for the automatic re-election of the old Directors on failure of their posts being filled up in the meeting, nor the provision enabling Directors to appoint any duly qualified person as Director could come into operation.

Held, also, that as the five persons were installed as Directors in contravention of the articles the mode of constituting them was ultra vires the Board of Directors and the suit by some of the share-holders who had been deprived of their fundamental privilege of choosing their own management was competent.

Held, also, that plaintiffs were entitled to maintain the suit even though the share-holders under the articles could by special meeting remove the Directors from the office by three-fourths majority. SRINIVASAN v. WATRAP S. SUBRAMNIA AYYAR Mad. 193

The sole basis upon which a claim to partition is founded is the joint possession of the parties. Hence a suit for partition can be brought by a person holding a subordinate interest in land against others holding a similar interest though a partition at the instance of a subordinate interest holder among persons holding other subordinate interest will not be binding upon the superior interest holder and will endure till the interest of the party seeking partition lasts.

The decree that was passed on the basis of the Counsel's representation was sought to be impugned on the ground that the Counsel did not have the requisite authority:

Held, that the party present having in fact been consulted, the agreement was binding on him.

Per Rankin, C. J.—If the party present in Court was not properly and adequately consulted then his duty was to refuse, when his Counsel was proposing to consent to a decree, to allow that to happen and if necessary to give notice to the other side and the Court that he was withdrawing the authority which the Counsel had on his behalf. If any right is to accrue to the client from the fact of his being in Court he must at least make his presence known to the Counsel in order that the Counsel may act accordingly and it cannot be supposed that because he keeps quiet and does not even instruct his Counsel as to who the client is or take any steps to inform the Counsel of his presence, the Counsel has got to carry on upon the footing that he has no authority to deal with the case as circumstances may require. *GHASIRAM v. Court fees Act (VII of 1870), ss. 7 (xi) (cc), 12—

Suit for possession against tenant holding over—Valuation—Decision as to class to which suit belongs—Appeal, competency of.

Section 12, Court Fees Act, applies merely to the valuation of the property for the purpose of calculating the Court-fee when there is no question as to the schedule of the Act with reference to which the valuation is to be made, and it does not apply to cases in which it is contended that the property has been wrongly valued and that the relief has been improperly estimated by putting it under a wrong article of the schedule in the Act. Therefore, an appeal lies against a decision as to the class to which a suit belongs although it does not lie against a decision as to the valuation of the suit in that class.

Per Patkar, J.—At any rate, the Court can interfere in such cases under s. 115, Civil Procedure Code, or s. 5 of Regulation II of 1827, if no appeal lies.

Where the accused were tried for offences under ss. 399 and 402 of the Penal Code, and the Deputy Superintendent of Police gave evidence as to the explanations offered by the accused soon after their arrest as to the circumstances which brought them to the place where they were arrested, which differed from those given by the accused in the Sessions Court:

Held, per Milne, J. C., that the evidence was admissible as showing that the conduct of the accused was not that of innocent persons.

Per Mehta, A. J. Failure of the Magistrate recording a confession to question the accused in order to satisfy himself that the accused was making the confession voluntarily is a radical and fatal defect which cannot be cured by s. 533, Criminal Procedure Code.

The fact that the Magistrate was satisfied from observation that the accused was making the confession voluntarily does not dispense with the necessity of questioning the accused.

Provided the Magistrate satisfies himself by putting questions and hearing answers, that the prisoner before him is making a voluntary confession, it is unnecessary for him to record the questions and answers; it is sufficient if he complies with the letter of the law. *RANBIR SINGH v. Ordinarily if a Magistrate has ordered an accused person to be tried, the trial must proceed. Under s. 222, cl. 2, Criminal Procedure Code, persons who showed a deficiency in the accounts with which they were entrusted could be convicted of criminal misappropriation even when it could not be shown that they had misappropriated any specific sum. SHIAM SUNDAR v. EMPEROR Oudh 810

Three offences of criminal breach of trust may be tried together and three offences for falsification of accounts may be tried together, but as an offence of criminal breach of trust is not of the same kind as an offence of falsification of accounts the trial of two or more charges of criminal breach of trust cannot legally be joined with two or more charges of falsification of accounts.

Criminal Procedure Code—contd.

—ss. 244, 256—Warrant cases—Accused, whether entitled to cross-examine prosecution witnesses before charge.

In the trial of a warrant case the accused has no absolute right of cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses before the framing of the charge, but Magistrates would generally be exercising a proper discretion if they permit some cross-examination at least, at that stage.

When a Magistrate has "to take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution" he has to record not only the examination-in-chief of the prosecution witnesses, but also their cross-examination and re-examination (if any), if no express provision is made for cross-examination. But when express provision for cross-examination is made, as in s. 256 or s. 208 (2), then the phrase mentioned cannot be construed as giving a separate and independent right of cross-examination. *LACHMI NARAIN v. In a trial by Jury the position of a Judge in India differs from that of a Judge in an English Court who is merely an instrument for passing a sentence or directing a release once a verdict is given. In India under the mandatory provisions of ss. 306 and 307, Criminal Procedure Code, the Judge must make up his mind whether he agrees or disagrees with the verdict and in the latter case form an opinion on the necessity for the ends of justice of submitting the case to the High Court.

Where a case has been referred under s. 307, Criminal Procedure Code, it is the duty of the High Court after considering the entire evidence and after giving due weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge and the Jury to acquit or convict the accused. It is not necessary that the verdict should

On the assumption that a Sessions Judge will not make a reference under s. 307, Criminal Procedure Code, unless he thinks that the verdict is manifestly wrong, the duty of the High Court in dealing with the reference is confined to considering whether the opinion of the Judge is supported by evidence.

— s. 439—Enhancement of sentence—Principles.

The principles upon which the High Court habitually acts as a court of revision in relation to the enhancement of sentences, where the law allows a discretion to the Court whose sentence is impugned, are that it should not interfere if the sentence passed involves substantial punishment, and should interfere if the sentence is manifestly inadequate. The Court is, in particular, slow to interfere where interference would involve the imprisonment of persons already discharged from Jail, though this circumstance is no insuperable obstacle. The Court also frequently declines to interfere in order to enhance a sentence, on the mere ground that it would itself have passed a heavier sentence, contenting itself with pointing out that the sentence is so far light that a heavier sentence would, have been maintained. *BHOLA NATH v. Under the Criminal Procedure Code, Sch. II, an offence under s. 124-A, Penal Code, is triable by the Court of Session, Chief Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class specially empowered. The Magistrate has a discretion to decide in what way the case shall be tried having regard to the alternatives given by the schedule. The Magistrate must have regard to the importance of the case and to the fact that the maximum penalty under the section is transportation for life. He must consider also whether if he sends the case to the Court of Session there will be Jury or assessors and in that connection he may consider which of the two tribunals his own or the Court of Session is the more satisfactory tribunal for deciding the case. Though the Magistrate's discretion is subject to review by High Court, the High Court will not interfere with his discretion except on certain definite grounds.

It is not a general rule of law that if an act is an offence under a special law providing penalties for such an act, the application of the general law would be repelled. It is possible that an act may be an offence both under special law as well as under general law both laws being applicable simultaneously. In such a case the offender may be prosecuted under either law though it would be more appropriate to prosecute the offender and to convict him under the special Act if the offence falls strictly within the purview of a section of the special Act and does not go beyond it. EMPEROR v. Customary Law (Punjab)—Attachment, whether gives cause of action to reversioners for declaratory suit—Suit before sale—Findings, whether res judicata—Alienation of ancestral property for trade, validity of.

Mere attachment does not amount to an infringement of the rights of the reversioners, and cannot furnish the latter with a cause of action for a suit for a declaration that the attachment shall not affect their reversionary rights. Therefore, the sons of the judgment-debtor cannot, before the sale bring a suit objecting to the attachment of the property and any finding in such a suit that there was no necessity would not operate as res judicata.

It cannot be laid down as a hard and fast rule that ancestral property can never be alienated by an agriculturist for the purpose of providing funds for trade or business. The decision in each case must depend upon in its own facts. NATHA v. GANESH SINGH Lah. 265

Succession—Bhatti Rajputs of Batala Tahsil

—Mode of succession—Chundawand or pagwand

—Change of custom—Evidence—Riwaj-i-am—

Record of custom contrary to general custom—

Evidentiary value—Onus of proof—Agreement to give up old custom—Validity—Successive records

—Later record, whether abrogates earlier.

Amongst the Bhatti Rajputs of Tahsil Batala the chundawand rule of succession has been followed from time immemorial and though at the attestation of the riwaj-i-am of the Tahsil in 1911-12, an attempt was made to make out that the pagwand rule should be followed in preference to the chundawand, no new custom of pagwand has arisen abrogating the older chundawand custom.

Where custom is the rule of law it is not open to the parties to agree that they would give up their old custom and follow a new one which they, for some reason, prefer; the parties have no power to legislate for themselves by mean of a riwaj-i-am.

Where a wajib-ul-arz contains merely a record of the wishes and opinions of the parties it could not be regarded as establishing any binding custom at variance with the personal law of the parties or an old established custom.

The parts of a wajib ul-arz referring to a custom are not provisions intended to be in force for a limited period only, but are statements that a certain custom existed and if the statements are correct there would be a natural presumption that the custom continued to exist and it would be for those alleging that a change had subsequently taken place to prove the allegation. Though the production of a later Record of Rights containing entries opposed to the earlier ones would be some proof of such a change, there would merely be a balance of evidence on either side and it could not be said that the second record destroyed or abrogated the earlier one.

An entry in a riwaj-i-am is a strong piece of evidence in support of a custom even though it is against the general custom and the burden of proof of a custom contrary to the entry cannot be said to be light even in cases where the entry is against general custom. FAZAL-I-HUSSAIN v. The respondent, a Hindu, married the petitioner, a Christian lady, by license at Manchester. After living with the respondent for some time in India the petitioner returns to England and the respondent married a Hindu lady in India by a Hindu form of marriage and had a son by her. The petitioner sued for dissolution of marriage:

Held, (1) that the petitioner's marriage with the respondent having been celebrated in England was a valid Christian marriage, despite the Indian domicile of the husband.

(2) that the respondent, however, being a Hindu was not precluded from marrying a second wife in India during the life time of the first and the petitioner was not entitled to divorce on the ground that the respondent had committed 'bigamy with adultery'.

(3) that the petitioner was, however, entitled to a decree for dissolution of marriage on the ground of the respondent's 'marriage with another woman with adultery'.

In dealing with divorce cases where it is found that the woman has been guilty of adultery and that her adultery has resulted from the husband's conduct towards her, the court should make allowance in treating her case with leniency. Where the husband deserted his wife without making any provision for her maintenance and the wife who was living in her father's house after her desertion by the husband cohabited with a person living as a guest in the father's house:

Held, that as the conduct of the husband in deserting his wife and making no provision for her, conduced greatly to the wife's adultery it was a fit case in which the court should exercise its discretion by granting to the wife a decree nisi under the provisions of s 14 of the Divorce Act. *GLADYS BOURKE v. Persons accused of an offence cannot be convicted upon the evidence of an approver unless the connection of each of the accused with the crime is proved by independent corroborative evidence.

Evidence of an isolated instance of association, by itself, is not of much corroborative value unless it is combined with other evidence of the same nature or of a nature showing an even more intimate connection between the accused.

There is much difference between association at a suspicious place which in itself points to two persons having met for some sinister purpose and a natural association which in itself raises no suspicions by itself. HANBIR SINGH v. EMPEROR Lah. 19

The effect of s. 133, Evidence Act, is that in very exceptional cases if the Court is satisfied that the presumption of untrustworthiness attaching to accomplices in general is rebutted by special circumstances, the Court can accept the uncorroborated testimony of the accomplice. But the established practice of all the Courts in England as well as in India is ordinarily to require corroboration of the evidence of an accomplice in regard to material particulars.

There is a general consensus of judicial opinion that the corroboration must be with regard to circumstances showing that the particular accused was connected with the crime. JAI SINGH v. EMPEROR Oudh 321

Execution—Executing Court's power to question validity of decree—Award under Arbitration Act—Judgment and decree based on award—Legality—Execution of award—Application for execution of decree treated as one for execution of award—Decree in excess of jurisdiction

Where an award is made under the Arbitration Act, the Court after satisfying itself as to its validity will order it to be filed and execution can be taken on it as though it were a decree but the Court can pronounce no judgment on it and make no decree. But if a judgment is pronounced and a decree is made, it is merely a superimposition, unnecessary and void. But the award being executable, an application for execution of decree may be treated as application for execution of award.

Where a decree presented for execution was made by a Court which apparently had no jurisdiction, whether pecuniary or territorial or in respect of the judgment-debtor's person, to make the decree the executing Court is entitled to refuse to execute it on the ground that it was made without jurisdiction and it is only within these narrow limits that the executing Court is authorised to question the validity of the decree.

A decree passed in excess of the limits prescribed may also be regarded as void on the ground of lack of inherent jurisdiction.

Once a cause is converted into a matter under the Arbitration Act, the inherent jurisdiction which the Court of general jurisdiction possessed over it, is curtailed, and the Court retains a limited jurisdiction only for the purposes and control over the proceedings of arbitration. It has no jurisdiction to treat the cause as a suit pending before it as one on which it can pass a judgment or make a decree. If it does so the decree passed is in excess of the limits and as such void. RABINDRA NATH CHAKRAVARTI v. JNANENDRA MOHAN BHADURI Cal. 466

Summary order directing guardian to deposit lease money in Court, legality of.

Where a guardian leased to his brother-in-law a plot of land belonging to the minor and the Court, holding that the lessee was merely a benamidar for the guardian, called upon the latter to deposit the lease money in Court:

Held, that the claim made against the guardian could be sustained only on the basis of a contract or a quasi contract as the amount was not recoverable from the guardian in his capacity as such, and the claim could not, therefore, be enforced in a summary manner but only by way of a suit. *ARUR SINGH v. Debts—Criminal misappropriation by father—Son's liability—Pious obligation—'Apyavaharika' debt.

Under the Hindu Law if a father's liability arises directly from a criminal act, i. e., an act for which the father may or may not have been successfully prosecuted, but which can be presumed or proved to be criminal on the evidence on the record, the son would not be bound to pay the father's debt. *BAI MANI v. Where the father of a Hindu family for himself and as the guardian of his minor sons executed a mortgage for a debt incurred in carrying on a contract business of the family and the mortgagee obtained a simple money decree against the father and the sons:

Held, that the decree could be executed personally against the sons in the absence of evidence to show that the debt was not a family debt and did not go to benefit the sons. DALIP NARAYAN SINGH v. RAGHUNANDAN PRASAD Pat. 447 (b)

Family arrangement—Widow's estate under family arrangement, nature of—Succession to widow's estate.

In a family arrangement the compromise is based on the assumption that there was an antecedent title of some kind in the parties and the agreement acknowledges and defines what that title is. The claim does not rest on contract only but upon a title acknowledged and defined by the contract.

The estate which a widow gets under a family arrangement is an absolute estate and forms part of stridhan and on her death devolves on her own her heirs and not on the heirs of her husband.

One P died separated from his brothers, the defendants in the present case, leaving behind certain self-acquired property, but the documents relating to it were in the name of the defendants. After his death the property was divided between the widow of P and the defendants. On her death her daughter's daughters claimed the property which had fallen to the share of their grandmother. The defendants pleaded that the property devolved on them:

Held, that the partition between widow of P and the defendants was in the nature of a family arrangement and as such the widow's estate was absolute and devolved upon the plaintiffs. VATSALABAI VINA YAK NIMKAR v. VASUNEV VISHNU MUSALE Bom. 177

Joint family—Alienation—Mortgage for speculative litigation—Validity—Success in litigation, effect of—Equities—Conditional decree.

Where money is raised by mortgage by a member of the family, even if he be the head of the family, for a speculative litigation which is to benefit the family only in the case of its success, it cannot be said that the mortgage was created for family necessity. Where the benefit to be acquired is to accrue to an individual member and not to the whole family the mortgage cannot bind the family estate.

Where, however, a grandfather mortgaged the family estate for a speculative litigation and succeeded, and the grandson sued to set aside the mortgage and the decree obtained thereupon:

Held, that it would be highly unjust to allow the plaintiff to succeed unconditionally and to escape payment of the debt which went substantially to help his grandfather to succeed in the litigation, if, ultimately, the plaintiff succeeds to that property and a conditional decree that the mortgage-decree could not be executed until the plaintiff succeeds to the property recovered by the litigation, could be passed. *PATESHWARI PRASAD PAL v. Gains of science—Member of joint family educated up to Entrance, earnings of—Self-acquired property.

Gains made personally and without the aid of joint funds by a member of a joint family, who was maintained at the expense of the joint family and received no more than an ordinary education suitable to his position as a member of the family, are the self-acquired property of such member and not joint family property. Education up to the Entrance pass is a very ordinary education and a clerk who started his life on Rs. 15 a month cannot be said to be a member of a profession or occupation requiring special training. Any saving, therefore, from his pay cannot be described as gains of science. JAI DAYAL v. NARAIN DAS Lah. 270 (b)

Partition of some property—Status of members with regard to undivided property—Possession of one, if adverse to others.

Where the co-parceners in a joint Hindu family make a partition and divide the joint property with the exception of a portion of it, they are, in absence of indication to the contrary, tenants-in-common with reference to the excepted property. The fact that the property was originally acquired by the members of the family as trespassers does not make any difference.

The possession of one tenant-in-common is not adverse to the other until ouster. BADRI MISIR v. SHANKAR MISIR Oudh 702

Self-acquisitions—Burden of proof

--Existence of ancestral property, effect of
--Adoption—Bequest to adoptive mother assented to by natural father before adoption—Validity.

It cannot be presumed from the mere fact that a Hindu father was possessed of some ancestral property that all his subsequent acquisitions are joint family property.

The natural father's assent cannot validate a bequest by the adoptive father in favour of the latter's daughter.

A bequest by the adoptive father in favour of the adoptive mother in a Will executed prior to adoption if assented to by the natural father before adoption, would be valid and binding on the adopted son if it is fair and reasonable. RAMIAH v. MAHALAKSHMANNA Mad 205

the family. TRIBENI PRASAD SINGH v. RAMASRAY PRASAD Pat. 49

Maintenance—Daughter-in-law—Father-in-law's liability—Liability of heirs—Liability of, person taking under Will—Rate of maintenance—Right to arrears.

Under Hindu Law, a father-in-law who is not possessed of ancestral property is not legally bound to maintain his widowed daughter-in-law. He is however, under a moral obligation to do so, and this obligation becomes a legal and binding obligation on his heirs. Persons in possession of the self-acquired property of a Hindu father after his death, whether they have taken such property by inheritance, survivorship or under a duly executed Will or deed of gift, are, therefore, under a legal obligation to maintain the widow of a son who predeceased his father.

A widow is not only entitled to bare maintenance but to maintenance suitable to her condition in life and the status of her family.

A widow who does not live in the house of her deceased husband does not thereby forfeit her claim to maintenance. LAXMIRAI v. SAMBHA Nag. 230 Partition—Evidence of separation—Circumstances—Cessor of commensality etc., value of—Presumption of completeness of partition.

Under the Hindu Law though a declaration of intention to separate must be made in definite and unambiguous terms it does not follow that where there is no evidence of an express declaration of intention, separation cannot be proved. The question is really one of intention and all that the law requires is that the intention should be clearly and unequivocally expressed whether it be by explicit declaration or by conduct.

In the absence of an explicit declaration, the evidence of conduct as well as of the surrounding circumstances is material for the purpose of judging whether the member intended to separate or not.

Though certain circumstances when taken individually do not furnish conclusive evidence of separation, yet they may point to a different conclusion when taken collectively or with reference to the particular facts of any individual case.

Though cessor of commensality may not be conclusive yet it may properly be considered in determining the question whether there was a partition of the joint family or not.

When a partial partition is proved or admitted to have taken place, the presumption is that there has been an entire partition both with reference to rights and properties. PURNIMA DEBYA v. NAND LAL OJHA Pat. 577

Evidence—Unequivocal deed—Separation of one member—Status of others—Presumption—Intention to continue united—Existence of minor sons, effect of.

If a deed of partition is unequivocal in its language and the intention of the parties is clear from it, it is not necessary to prove acts in support of the deed.

A presumption of complete separation does not arise in all cases when there has been separation of one or more members. No definite agreement to continue to be a joint family on the part of the remaining members is necessary. An agreement may be inferred if the facts justify such inference.

Where an adult son separates from the family it is open to the father and the minor sons to remain joint and if the father's intention was that they should not separate that intention would be as effective to continue the joint family as an agreement, express or inferred, between the adults. TIKKILAL v. GULACHAND Nag 233

Religious endowments—Dedication—

Essentials—Delivery of possession to trustee, necessity of—Construction of deed—Absolute dedication or mere charge—Tests—Estoppel of reversioner.

Where an endowment deed purported to be a deed of dedication of the settlor's properties to certain deities but there was failure to carry out the dedication into effect by delivery of the property by the settlor to the mutawalli, nor was there any change effected in the mode of expenditure of the properties dedicated, a large part being spent for the settlor and a very small one for the deities as before:

Held, that under the circumstances all that the settlor effected by the deed was the creation of a charge on the properties for the service and worship of deities therein mentioned, and not an out and out dedication.

Where the donor of a religious endowment constitutes himself the mutawalli there must be some unmistakable act to show that the possession was transferred to the deities and that the donor completely divested himself of the ownership of the property. The effective way of showing this transfer of possession is by altering the land register.

Where a mutawalli has been appointed to look after the temple properties, an acceptance by the temple pujari of a gift on behalf of the deities would not amount to an acceptance in law because the gift to the deities must be accepted on their behalf by the mutawalli.

Where a reversioner bought a portion of a village, the other portion of which was bought by the deceased for settling that portion on certain deities and both the purchases were effected by the same deed:

Held, that the purchase by the reversioner under the same deed did not raise any estoppel and it was open for him to challenge the settlor's dedication to the deities. BHAKDHARI SINGH v. SRI RAMCHANDERJI Pat. 290

—'Gotra,' meaning of.

In order that a person may be male agnate or gotraja-sapinda of the propositus it must be proved, first, that he is of the same gotra, that is, of a common patriarchal stock and, secondly, that he is a sapinda of the deceased, that is, connected by blood through a common ancestor, the connection being traced through males.

In the absence of challenge on this point, it might well be that proof by a person that he was a sapinda of the propositus would be sufficient to raise a presumption that he was also gotraja, but, on his being challenged on this point, it is for him to satisfy the court that he complies with this condition also, before he can succeed in his claim to the succession.

The term "agnate" is not a term of art in the English legal system; in the English language, though not in frequent use, it is a known term, used to indicate relationship on the father's side or exclusively through males and it is a word expressive of relationship similar to "son" or brother.

The word 'gotra' has only one meaning and denotes descent from common patriarchal stock. DULAHIN JADUNATH KUMAR v. BISHESHAH BAKSH SINGH Widow—Alienation—Inadequacy of price, effect of.

While it is correct to say that a transfer by a Hindu widow for legal necessity and for adequate price is binding on the reversioner it does not necessarily follow that a sale otherwise justified must under all circumstances be set aside if it can be shown that the price fetched was not adequate. Circumstances might make it absolutely necessary for the widow to sell her husband's property even for an inadequate price. Each case must depend on its own circumstances. If the necessity for the sale of the property was so great that the husband's property must be sold and if under circumstances then existing it was not possible for her to obtain the full value of the property which had to be sold and she could not get more than what is considered to be an inadequate price the sale would nevertheless be valid. *NAUNITA KUNWAR v. Alienation—Suit by reversioners—Limitation—Widow's duty to keep down interest on debts—Bona fide creditor, rights of—Interest—Reasonableness of rate.

If a suit to challenge a mortgage by a widow is barred by limitation the reversioners cannot be allowed to do indirectly what they could not do directly by showing that the original mortgage to discharge which the later mortgage was executed was itself not binding on the estate.

A widow is not bound to discharge her husband's debts out of the income of his estate; but she is bound to keep down the interest on her husband's debts and is only entitled to enjoy the net income from her husband's property. But an exception is recognised in favour of the alienee. If there was actual pressure at the time of the alienation and the widow had then no funds available for the discharge of the debts or the alienee, after reasonable enquiry, bona fide believed that the alienation was necessary, he will be protected.

In order to determine of the reasonableness of a particular rate of interest the whole conditions and the terms of the lending must be considered together. THIRUVENCADAM PILLAI v. GNANASAMBANDAM PILLAI Mad. 43

Decree against widow, when binding on reversioner—Tests—Frame of suit—Consent to payment of decree amount, whether amounts to acknowledgment that it is binding on estate.

Where a decree is obtained against a limited owner such as a Hindu widow whether or not the debt was binding on the estate during the life-time of the limited owner, the decree-holder can proceed against her interest in the property. Therefore, consent by the reversioners to a stipulation reserving an amount for payment to the holder of a decree against a limited owner does not amount to an acknowledgment that the debt is binding not only upon the limited owner's interest but also upon the reversioners.

In order to construe a suit against a widow as a representative suit, some indication however slight, must be found to show that the creditor intended so to frame it and unless such indications are present and if the suit is in form only a simple money claim against the widow although in point of fact the debt may have been contracted for necessary purposes the reversionary interest could not be held to be bound by the decree against her. *SETHURAMA v. Income-tax—Insurance against loss of profits, resulting from fire—Moneys received by assured, whether liable to be taxed—‘Income,’ ‘profits,’ meanings of.

Moneys which are not strictly ‘profits’ of a business may yet be the ‘income’ of the tax-payer and the real question in cases of this nature is whether the insurance moneys constitute ‘income,’ and not whether these moneys are ‘profits’ of the assessee’s business. *KING v. Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), ss. 2 (4), 4 (3), (VII), 6 (IV), 10, 12—Amounts paid to agents as compensation for cessation of agency—Whether assessable income—‘Income,’ ‘business,’ meanings of—Principles of liability.

The word ‘income’ in the Income Tax Act connotes periodical monetary return ‘coming in’ with some sort of regularity or expected regularity from definite sources. The sources need not be continuously productive but must be one whose object is the protection of a definite return excluding anything in the nature of a mere wind fall.

Though the words used in the definition of ‘business’ in s. 2 (4) of the Act are wide, underlying each of them there is the fundamental idea of the continuous exercise of an activity, and in order that an income may be assessable under the head of business in s. 6 of the Act, it is essential that the business must one carried on by the assessee. It must be profits earned by a process of production.

The expression ‘receipts arising from business’ in s. 4 (3) (viii) means receipts arising from the carrying on of business.

Where the assessee acted as distributing agents of certain oil companies and on the termination of the agency the assessee was paid a certain sum of money as compensation for cessation of the agency:

Held, that the amount so received by the assessee was not assessable income in as much as it was not the produce or the result of carrying on the business of agency but was received as a sort of solatium for its compulsory cessation. COMMISSIONER OF INCOME TAX, BENGAL v. SHAW, WALLACK & CO

The corporation was constituted with perpetual succession and common seal under the style and title of the trustees of the Sir Currimbhoy Ebrahim Baronetcy. The corporation consisted of the Baronet for the time being and three Government Officials named in the Act. Certain properties were made to vest in the corporation who were to pay all taxes etc, to defray the expense of repairs and insurance, to set aside a sinking fund and a repair fund and to pay the surplus to the Baronet for the time being. The second Baronet died just before the end of the Financial year 1927, 1928. On 26th September, 1928, the corporation made a return for income-tax for the year 1928-29. The corporation were ordered to pay the income-tax which was paid. In March they were asked to pay super-tax which they refused to do. The question referred by the Commissioner of Income-tax was whether apart from s. 56, Income-Tax Act, the corporation were properly assessed to income-tax and super-tax for the year 1928-29:

Held, that the corporation constituted by the special Act was an individual within the orbit of s. 3, Income-Tax Act and not an association of individuals.

Held, that in view of the fact that the assessment for the years 1922-24 to 1927-28 was final and not subject to appeal and that for the purpose of allowing depreciation the life of motor cars is taken as five years under the Income-tax rules, the assessee was not entitled to claim depreciation on the cars which were in use from 1922-23, in a year subsequent to the said five years.

Held, further, that the fact that no depreciation account had been maintained as required by the rules did not give rise to any inference that no allowance for deductions had been made in the assessment for the years 1922-24 to 1927-28.

Rule 25 of the Income Tax Manual is of a mandatory character and provides the only manner in which the income, profits and gains of Life Assurance Companies can be determined. The assessing officer has no discretion to depart from its provisions and to have recourse to the other provisions of the Income Tax Act for the purpose of determining and assessing the income, profits and gains of a Life Assurance Company.

There is a clear distinction between chargeability and assessability. The former expression connotes liability to pay income-tax; the latter expression has reference primarily to the machinery, which ought to be utilized, and the procedure that must be followed in determining the amount which should be levied as income-tax.

Where, therefore, no machinery exists to make it possible for the Income Tax Authorities to assess the income, profits or gains of the company during a particular year the assessment for that year is not legal.

Section 34, Income Tax Act, pre-supposes that the income, profits or gains which can be assessed under it should have been chargeable during the preceding year and also must have escaped assessment. *LAXMI INSURANCE CO. Income Tax Act—contd.

The words "assess or reassess such income, profits or gains", in s. 34, Income Tax Act, must be taken to refer to the income, profits or gains chargeable to income-tax which have escaped assessment referred to in the prior part of the section. Accordingly in a proceeding under s. 34 the Income-tax Officer and after him the Assistant Commissioner are only dealing with the extra income which has not been assessed to income-tax. No jurisdiction is given to either of these officers by s. 34 to make a new assessment for the purposes of taxing the whole of that assessment under the Income-Tax Act.

Section 34 does not confer on the authorities a power to grant relief to the assessee on the ground that the previous assessment under s. 23 (4) was too high.

An application for copy of the judgment in an Income-tax appeal is properly within the meaning of the words "attendance before an Income Tax officer" in s. 61, Income Tax Act, and can be made only by the assessee or a person expressly authorised in writing in that behalf. The High Court has power to grant an injunction to restrain a person from executing an ex parte decree pending the disposal of an appeal preferred to the High Court from order refusing to set aside that ex parte decree.

The High Courts, over and above the powers which they enjoy under the Civil Procedure Code, possess an equitable jurisdiction derived from the old Supreme Court to issue an injunction in appropriate cases and there is nothing in the Civil Procedure Code, that deprives the High Courts of that —Retrospective effect—General principles—Law affecting right to sue, limitation etc., whether adjective law.

Per Sulaiman, Actg. C. J.—If a new enactment lays down that a person may under certain conditions sue for certain specified reliefs, and he sues after the Act has come into force it would not, strictly speaking, be giving to the Act a retrospective effect if he avails himself of its provisions. The Act is in force when he is suing, even though his cause of action might have accrued before the Act was passed. It would be giving a retrospective effect if the Court applied that Act to a suit previously instituted.

A substantial right is not assumed to be taken away by a new Act unless it expressly says so. But a right to sue in one Court rather than another or a right to wait for a particular period of time before suing is not a substantive right as they are ordinarily matters of procedure only.

Interpretation of Statutes—concl'd.

When a question of limitation is raised it ought to be decided in accordance with the Law of Limitation in force at the time of the institution of the suit and not that in force at the time of the cause of action, unless there be any express provision to the contrary in the Act itself. RAM KARAN SINGH v. Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), s. 11—Award

—Duty of Collector to decide matter of apportionment

—Separate awards in respect of same land—Legality

—Land acquisition appeals—Privy Council—Interference on question of valuation.

In appeals from land acquisition cases the Judicial Committee will not review the decree of an Indian Appellate Court merely upon questions of valuation of property, unless the judgment is vitiated by wrong application of principle or some important point in evidence has been overlooked or misapplied.

Under s. 11 of the Land Acquisition Act, it is the duty of the Collector to make an award in regard to three matters, viz., (1) the area of the land included in the award; (2) the total compensation to be allowed for that land, and (3) the apportionment of that compensation among all the persons interested in that land. Any one piece of land forming part of a whole in which more than one person has an interest for which he can claim compensation, ought not to be made the subject of more than one award. Each award should contain within its four corners the fixing of the value of the land with which it deals, and the apportionment of that value between the various persons interested in that land.

But under proper circumstances, if there are two awards in respect of the same piece of land, they may be read together and treated as one. PRAG NARAIN v. COLLECTOR OF AGRA P. C. 449

Landlord and tenant—Permanent tenancy—Execution of lease for fixed term after negotiation and intervention—Compromise of doubtful claim—Assertion of hostile title—Acquisition of permanent tenancy.

A person in possession of land under a tenancy for a fixed term cannot by a mere assertion in a judicial proceeding during the period of tenancy and the lapse of twelve years without that assertion having been successfully challenged obtain a title as a permanent title.

The plaintiff landlord instituted a suit for the ejectment of his tenants on the expiration of the term of the lease i. e., 25 years after its execution in 1897. The lease was the result of negotiations for 8 years and intervention of political authorities. The lease provided for enhanced rent and restriction on cultivation of lands, planting of trees and erection of buildings. The tenants gave up any right to continue as tenants after the expiry of the lease. In the suit the tenants objected to their ejectment on the ground that they were permanent tenants in spite of the lease:

Held, that the defendants were not permanent tenants and the lease was binding on the parties and their family members as a compromise of a doubtful claim. SHANKAR YESU KARGUTKAR v. H. H. KHEM SAWANT

Permanent tenancy—Question of legal inference from proved facts—Weight of circumstances —Facts must be taken as a whole—Purpose of tenancy, prior transfers, etc.

The question whether a tenancy is permanent is not to be treated as itself a mere question of fact though the actual findings of fact are binding upon the High Court in second appeal.

In considering whether the proper legal inference from the facts proved is that the tenancy was a permanent one, it is necessary to bear in mind two considerations. The first is that the legal inference of permanency is to be drawn from the ascertained facts taken as a whole. The second is that even although there be a considerable number of facts which point to the tenancy having a permanent character, the effect of these facts as evidence may be entirely destroyed by a single piece of negative evidence.

Upon the question whether a tenancy is permanent or not the law of India attaches a good deal of importance to the question whether the tenancy was for residential purposes.

Prior to the Transfer of Property Act a tenancy which was not permanent was not transferable, and the fact that the transfer was recognized by the landlord without any claim being made to require the transferee to make terms with him for a new tenancy points very firmly in favour of a permanent right.

A statement in the rent receipts that the rents are paid for certain specified months or for a certain number of months is neutral. A tenant taking such a receipt cannot be held to have no higher right than a monthly tenant.

[Their Lordships held on all the circumstances that the tenancy was a permanent one]. DEBENDRA NATH DHANG v. PASHUPATI NATH DEB Cal 889

In a suit for rent where the tenant denies that he has ever got possession of the property leased, it is for the landlord to prove that he has discharged his obligation to put the tenant in possession before he can enforce the tenant to pay rent. But the onus would be primarily on the tenant where the tenant has already paid the rent under the lease or where the tenant claims that certain properties of which he had not got possession were within the properties let which the landlord denied.

To succeed in a suit for rent the landlord must not only show that the tenant is in possession of the subject of the lease, but that such possession was attributable to the lease, or might be so.

Where it is proved that the tenant obtained possession of part of the properties under the lease the Court should give a decree for rent subject to an abatement in respect of properties of which the possession is not given.

Section 21 of the Madras Hereditary Village Offices Act takes away the jurisdiction of the Civil Court only in cases in which the jurisdiction is conferred on the Revenue Courts by s. 13 of the Act. Where the case of the plaintiff is that he has been validly appointed as karnam by the proprietor, that he is holding the office and discharging its duties and that the appointment of the defendant by the Revenue Divisional Officer in cancellation of his own appointment is null and void, the suit is cognisable by the Civil Court.

Whether the plaintiff is the next heir in order of succession or not, if he is in possession of the office and is discharging its duties, there is sufficient legal character within the meaning of s. 42, Specific Relief Act, to sustain an action for declaration that he was validly appointed karnam and that cancellation of his appointment by the Revenue Officer concerned is null and void.

Section 11 (2) Madras Proprietary Estates Village Service Act confers powers on the Divisional Officer to appoint another individual to the office in cases where a proprietor who has the right to appoint omits to do so within the statutory period or if the person again appointed by the proprietor is also disqualified under s. 10 (1). Where action is taken by the Revenue Officer under s. 11 (1) the right of appointment is conferred on the Revenue Divisional Officer only in respect of cases where the nominee of the proprietor is disqualified under s. 10 (1) but does not extend to cases where the nominee is not in fact the nearer heir to the last holder of the office, that is, the cases where the proprietor's appointment contravenes the provisions of s. 10 (2). Where the plaintiff does not suffer from any of the heads of disqualifications referred to in s. 10 (1) the Divisional Revenue Officer has no jurisdiction to set aside the order of the proprietor.

Where the Divisional Officer makes an appointment after taking action under s. 11 sub-s. (1), the sub-section should be understood as confining the right of appeal to cases where the appointment is disallowed by the Revenue Divisional Officer on the

A riparian owner is not liable to pay water-cess to Government for using water of a stream belonging to the Government, land on one side of which belongs to him, as he takes it in respect of a natural, or of an easement, right.

A river 'belongs' to the Government within the meaning s. 1, of the Madras Irrigation Cess Act, 1865, when the solum of the stream belongs to the Government, which happens when the Government is the proprietor of lands abutting on the river on both sides or when the river is tidal and navigable.

A riparian owner is a person who owns land abutting on a stream and who as such has a certain right to take water from the stream. His right to the use of the stream does not depend upon the ownership of the soil of the stream and he can take water first of all for domestic use and then for other uses connected with the land of which irrigation of the lands which form the property is one. The right is a natural right and not in the strict sense of the term an easement, though in many cases it has been called an easement. —Alienation—Family karar—Alienation by karnavan in excess of powers—Amount utilised for benefit of family—Alienee's right to refund of consideration—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 64, 65—Principal of restitution.

The karnavan of a Nambudiri illom executed a kanom in respect of the illom properties. It was found that the amount was borrowed to meet the expenses of the marriage expenses of a female member of the illom and that the sum was in fact utilised in connection with such expenses. A suit was instituted by a junior member to set aside the kanom on the ground that there was a karar to which the karnavan (who was then a junior member) was a party under which no debts could be incurred except with the consent of all the adult members of the illom for the time being:

Held, that, granting that the transaction as a kanom was not binding on the illom, as the money had been utilised for the benefit of the illom and every member of the illom including the plaintiff had the benefit of that money, the kanom could be set aside only on the condition that the illom or its karnavan for the time being should pay the kanomdar the amount borrowed from him with interest.

The principle on which ss. 64 and 65, Contract Act, rest is not confined to cases expressly included in either of the sections. MUNDAKATH MATHU v. CHALORA ILLATH VISHNU NAMBUDRIPAD Mad. 350

Malicious prosecution—Essentials of action—Matters to be proved—Discharge, effect of—Burden of proof of innocence—Malice, necessity of—Measure of damages—Costs of defence—Danger to liberty—Witnesses, liability of.

In a suit for damages for malicious prosecution the discharge of the accused cannot by itself be considered as evidence of the groundlessness of the prosecution, but when the accused is discharged and he brings a suit for damages no obligation is imposed on him to prove affirmatively that he was innocent.

Malice is a necessary ingredient in a suit for damages for malicious prosecution.

Witnesses cannot be sued for damages in respect of evidence given by them in a judicial proceeding.

In a suit for damages for malicious prosecution the plaintiff is entitled to legitimate expenses incurred in defending himself in the criminal Court.

The Court in a suit for damages for malicious prosecution can take into consideration not only the injury to the reputation of the plaintiff but also the danger to liberty. FAKIR MUHAMMAD v. FAKIR MUHAMMAD NANJI Sind 757

Where the guardian of the property of a minor deposited the minor's money in his own firm and omitted to give proper accounts and subsequently, after the death of the guardian, the firm was adjudicated insolvent owing to the speculation of other persons:

Held, that as the omission of the guardian to invest the minor's property in trustee securities as directed by s. 20, Trusts Act, 1882, and the omission to file proper accounts was the main cause of the loss caused to the minor, both the guardian and his surety were liable for the loss sustained by the minor. *RADHAKISHEN v. Mortgage. See REGULATION ACT, 1806 69 —Interest—Presumptions as to rate—No provision as to rate of interest—Entire sum payable on default—Reasonable rate.

If a mortgage-deed contains stipulations regarding the payment of interest till the date fixed for payment, a presumption arises that the parties intended that interest should be paid after the date and where no inference regarding the rates can be drawn the presumption is that it was intended to pay interest at a reasonable rate.

A mortgage-deed in which prospective interest had been added as sawai and which provided for payment in instalments contained a clause that if instalments were defaulted interest at 2 per cent. per mensem compound was to be paid till satisfaction. There was, however, a further clause that, if two instalments were defaulted, the whole amount should become due. The deed made no provision for interest on the whole sum if it became due:

Held, (i) that as there was no precise definition of the rate of interest prior to default, it was not possible to draw an inference that the parties intended that after the whole amount became due, interest should be paid at the rate which can be deduced from the arrangement regarding addition of sawai and payment by instalment;

(ii) that as the terms of the deed did not indicate what rate of interest should be paid after the entire amount became due the plaintiff was only entitled to a reasonable rate of interest. PARASHRAM v. KRISHNA Nag. 887

tion is made from the prior mortgagee and until the subsequent mortgagee does not take possession the mortgagor shall pay interest to him from his own pocket six monthly, the liability of the mortgagor to pay interest is personal and no charge on the mortgaged property is created so long as the property is not redeemed from the prior mortgagee and consequently possession is not delivered to the subsequent mortgagee. The charge becomes operative from the date when the mortgagor redeems the mortgaged property from the hands of the prior mortgagee but does not deliver possession of the same to the mortgagor. In other words the charge accrues from the time when the subsequent mortgagee becomes entitled to enter into possession.

When according to the mortgage-deed the mortgagee is entitled to the costs of the mutation proceedings, such costs must be decreed to include the costs of obtaining possession by aid of the Court previous to the mutation of names. HASHMAT ALI v. GOBARDHAN DASS Oudh 332

Suit for sale on basis of mortgage—Exemption of one house by statement, whether release—Mortgagee's right to claim entire money from one house—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 82.

One C after mortgaging two houses, house No. 1 and house No. 2, in favour of the plaintiff sold house No. 1 to defendant No. 2. Later on the mortgagee sued for sale of both houses on the foot of the mortgage. After written statements had been filed the mortgagee's Counsel made a statement admitting that the house No. 2 did not belong to the mortgagor in the mortgage in suit and that it belonged to one K predecessor-in-interest of defendant No. 3 who had mortgaged it to defendant No. 4 and that it might be excluded from claim. In consequence of this statement Counsel for defendant No. 4 remitted costs:

Held, that the action of the mortgagee did not amount to a release and he could ask that his entire claim under the mortgage be satisfied out of house No. 1.

— Muhammadan Law—Divorce—Words implying divorce—Express words for effecting divorce—Talak, what is.

The words 'I give up all relations and would have no connection of any sort' addressed by a Muhammadan husband to his wife are not express within the meaning of the Hanafi Muhammadan Law to effect a divorce nor are they understood in that law as implying divorce. Among Indian Muhammadans they are frequently used for the purpose of dissociating oneself from the company or the presence of the addressee, of relieving such a person from the obligation of rendering service to the user and also for the purpose of withdrawing restraints from the movements of addressee. The express words for effecting divorce are well known to be talak and its grammatical variations. These words are terms of art and the technical meaning which they have acquired by usage is freedom from the bondage of marriage and not from any other bondage. Once they are used they must be given effect to according to their technical import and evidence as to any intention to the contrary is not permissible according to the Hanafi Muhammadan Law. WAJID ALI KHAN v. Under Muhammadan Law a widow's right to retain her husband's property as a creditor for her dower until her debt is satisfied is a personal right and not an interest in the property. Therefore, a creditor who has got a decree against her and other heirs of her husband in respect of his debts is entitled to have the property attached and sold in execution of his decree subject to her right of retention until her dower debt has been satisfied out of the income of the property or otherwise. KALEKHAN v. — Gift—Husband's gift to wife or by father to son—Delivery of possession, necessity of.

In the case of a gift by a husband to his wife Muhammadan Law does not require actual vacation by the husband and actual taking of separate possession by the wife of the property gifted. A declaration made by the husband followed by the handing over of the deed are amply sufficient to establish a transfer of possession.

In the case of a gift by a Muhammadan father to his infant child no transfer of possession is required; it is only necessary to establish a bona fide intention to give. MOHAMMAD SADIQ v. FAKR JAHAN P. C. 385

She is equally incompetent to agree to the disposal of her infant children's share in any part of the immovable property of their father by adopting an award made on a reference made by her and by calling the transaction a family arrangement. MOHAMMAD EJAZ HUSAIN v. — Succession—Custom governing ancestral estate—Presumption regarding self-acquisitions—Rebuttal.

In the case of a Muhammadan family if a custom governs the succession to the ancestral estate the presumption is that it attaches also to the personal acquisitions of the last owner left by him on his death and it is for the person who asserts that these properties follow a line of devolution different from that of the taluqa to establish it. But where a family custom in respect of succession to taluqdari estate is of recent origin and instances of succession to personal acquisitions by Muhammadan Law are established, such presumption is sufficiently rebutted. MOHAMMAD SADIQ v. FAKR JAHAN P. C. 385

— Wakf, essentials of—Constructions of grant—Valid objects—Some of objects invalid, effect of—Sajjadanashin—Ground for removal—Sajjadanashin and mutawalli, distinction between—Court's powers to separate offices of mutawalli and sajjadanashin.

In determining whether or not a particular grant is a wakf it is not of much importance to see in whose name the grant is made. The crucial question is always for what purpose the grant is made.

Muhammadan Law—contd.

In order to interpret a document and to determine whether or not the property granted to an individual by name is wakf it is necessary to refer to the customary use of the income of the property.

The term 'wakf' literally means detention or stoppage and the legal meaning of it according to the Hanafi School of Muhammadan Law is the extinction of the proprietor's ownership in the thing dedicated and its detention in the implied ownership of God in such a manner that the profits may revert to and be applied for the benefit of mankind.

The requirement of a valid wakf is a substantial dedication of the usufruct of the property to charitable, religious or good purposes within the meaning of Muhammadan Law, no particular form is necessary for creating a wakf. A wakf may be construed from Royal grants of property made in favour of individual persons as long as it is for a perpetual religious charitable or good purposes. The dedicator need not use the word wakf at all or may not formally transfer the property to the ownership of God and the appropriation of property to pious and charitable purposes would suffice to constitute a wakf. A grant to an individual heritable by his descendants may be a wakf. If there is a substantial dedication to a valid object it will not cease to be a wakf because some objects are mentioned which are not legal objects of wakf. The wakf will be valid and the whole income will be devoted to for the valid purposes. The expenses over the drum-beaters, casual visitors and maintenance of the sajjadanashin of a khankah and his heirs are objects of a valid trust. The essentials of a valid wakf are: (1) an appropriator must destine the ultimate application of the income to the objects not liable to become extinct; (2) the appropriation must be at once complete; (3) there must be no stipulation in the wakf for sale of property and expenditure of the price on the appropriator's necessities; (4) perpetuity must be a necessary condition.

A present to a dead man cannot by any stretch of imagination be construed to mean a personal grant to the successor of the saint.

A khankah is a monastery or religious institution where darveshes and seekers of truth congregate for religious instructions and devotional exercises. It is generally founded by a darvesh or a sufi professing esoteric belief, whose teachings and personal sanctity have attracted disciples whom he initiates into his doctrine. A khankah is usually under the governance of a sajjadanashin who not only acts as mutawalli or manager of the institution and of the adjoining mosques, but also as the spiritual preceptor of the adherents. The founder is generally the first sajjadanashin and after his death the spiritual line (sil silla) is extended by succession of sajjadanashins. Generally members of his family chosen by him or according to the directions given by him in his lifetime or selected by the faqirs and murids are formally installed.

An assignment of income does not always mean an assignment of corpus. All depends upon the terms of the grant and its construction.

Though the partition of the endowment itself is illegal, distribution of profits arising from it is legal.

The usage can be taken into consideration in deciding whether there is a trust.

A trust in the sense of an obligation attached to the ownership of property is known to and recognised by Muhammadan Law.

Muhammadan Law—contd.

The distinction between an English trust for charitable and religious purposes and a wakf under Muhammadan Law is more historical than legal. Different systems of law have different explanations as to the legal ownership of a property dedicated for public, religious or charitable purposes. English law recognises two estates one legal and another equitable. Imam Abu Haneefa holds the ownership continuing in the appropriator, his two disciples hold the ownership to be in God, Shias in the beneficiaries and the Hindus in the idol. But whatever may be the difference in the conception of the legal ownership of the property there is no difference whatsoever that the beneficiaries have a right in the property which the Courts will enforce. The distinction of legal and equitable estate is of no consequence. The same Courts exercise both jurisdictions. The difference in the law of trust and wakf as to the transferability or otherwise of the property is also due to this difference in the conception of ownership of the property. As under English law the legal ownership is vested in a human being he can transfer it subject to the obligations placed upon it. Under the Muhammadan Law while the ownership is vested in God the mutawalli is His manager; he cannot transfer the corpus of the property. A wakf in the terms of English Law is a trust and the legal ownership is vested in God and the equitable ownership in the cesti que trust, and as nobody can transfer the property vested in God the wakfs are not transferable.

A person who himself comes in possession of properties as trustee cannot take up the position that they are his private properties.

A sajjadanashin can be removed where a proper case is made out against him for such removal. Cases of mismanagement or in capacity will not ordinarily be sufficient to remove a sajjadanashin as distinct from the managership of the property. It must be shown that the man is not only incompetent to manage the property but that he is of such a low morality that his continuance as the superior head of the sacred shrines and institutions is repugnant and undesirable.

Even if the office of the sajjadanashin and that of the manager have been held by one and the same person since the creation of the trust, if the Court finds that the present incumbent is unfit to continue as manager though quite worthy to be sajjadanashin it is not bound to follow either the terms of the grant, if any, or the usage which has been in force so far.

Courts will not apply the principle governing the case of a mutawalli to a sajjadanashin. By him the spiritual line of the founder is continued. People become his disciple mostly not so much on account of his personal qualifications but on account of the fact that by becoming his disciple they will connect themselves in a spiritual link with the founder saint.

A sajjadanashin is not a mutawalli and his powers of expenditure are wide and as long as he keeps up the institution in a fairly decent condition he is not accountable to anybody. SHAH MUHAMMAD KAZIM v. ABISAGHIE Pat. 417 servants—Waqf silent as regards amount payable—Subsequent declaration of amount by waqif—Validity—Power of mutawalli to reduce amount fixed.

Under the Muhammadan Law a provision for the salary and pension of servants is a valid object of waqf.

If a provision is expressly made in the deed of waqf it is not open to the waqif to revoke it or to derogate from it, but if he has deliberately deferred making provision on a particular subject to a future date and does make such provision, such provision should be considered to be part and parcel of the deed itself.

No validity attaches to a consent given by their guardian during minority, in which case they are free to dispute the validity of the will and to claim their shares according to Muhammadan Law. GHULAM MOHAMMAD v. If the mutawalli has complied with the provisions of s. 3 no question as to whether he denies the wakf or admits it can arise because by his conduct in furnishing particulars of the wakf property he may be deemed to have admitted the wakf and he can be convicted for failure to file statement under s. 5 of the Mussalman Wakf Validating Act of 1923.

Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869), ss. 3, 22, 29, 31

—Will—Construction—Power to widow to adopt in succession—Life-estate and power to adopt—Widow's power to disclaim—Effect of disclaimer—Adoption of daughters or sister's son—Succession to non-talukdari property, rules governing—Adoption—Ceremonies—Applicability of Hindu Law—Life-estate, whether condition for exercising power to adopt—Effect of adoption—Divesting of estate—Will—Power to make disposition contrary to law.

A Muhammadan talukdar made a will which directed that if no one of his four wives had any issue, then the first wife was to adopt a son within two years of the death of the testator, that the boy to be adopted was to be a Sunni lad under ten years and was not to belong to a particular family; that if the first wife failed to adopt a son within the prescribed period then the second wife was within the space of two years to adopt subject to the "above conditions." If the second wife also failed to adopt then the third was empowered to adopt. If she too failed then the fourth was given power to adopt on the same conditions:

Held, that, on a proper construction of the will, if the first wife died after the death of the testator without making an adoption, then the second wife was at once to come into possession and become entitled to make an adoption within two years of her coming into possession subject to the condition that the boy was a Sunni lad under ten years of age and did not belong to the particular family.

Where a Muhammadan talukdar creates under his will a life-estate in favour of his widow with power to adopt, the widow is fully justified in law in refusing the life-estate as well as the power to adopt, and where she so disclaims her right, her estate is lost and the estate of another legatee entitled to succeed under the will is accelerated.

A childless widow of a Muhammadan talukdar can make an adoption of her daughter's son or sister's son under the provisions of s. 29, Oudh Estates Act, provided she has no natural son born to her from her husband and provided she has not already adopted a son. The expression "for the purposes of this Act" cannot very well be restricted to mean "only for the purposes of intestacy."

Section 22 of the Oudh Estates Act applies only to an "estate" as defined in the Act; and non-talukdari property is not an "estate" within the meaning of the definition given in s. 3. The rule of succession to non-talukdari property is governed by s. 23 of the Act that is, by ordinary law, modified by custom, if any, proved in the case. Regarding non-talukdari property the presumption that it is governed by the rule of single heir succession in the case of List No. 2 estate is rebuttable; but there is no presumption that the rule of male lineal primogeniture would govern such non-talukdari property in the case of List No 2 estate.

Under s. 29, Oudh Estates Act, the widow of a Muhammadan talukdar is allowed to make an adoption only in those cases in which it is permissible for a Hindu to do so. The Oudh Estates Act (1 of 1869) is a purely secular enactment and has nothing to do with the peculiar notions of Hindus and Muhammadans on the subject of adoption. It merely lays down that in those cases in which a Hindu widow could adopt, a Muhammadan widow of a talukdar could also do so. It does not touch the question of the qualifications of the boy to be adopted. A childless Hindu widow may, with the authority of her husband, make an adoption and the same power is given to the widow of a Muhammadan talukdar by Act I of 1869. A Hindu widow who has a son born to her by her husband cannot legally adopt and similarly a Muhammadan widow if she has a son by her husband could also not adopt under Act I of 1869. Adoption like marriage in Hindu Law, is in the nature of a religious sacrament but no religious ceremony is necessary under Muhammadan Law for the purpose of making an adoption which is unknown to Islamic Law. The only condition of Hindu Law which is imposed upon a widow of a Muhammadan talukdar by Act I of 1869 is that the latter must be a childless widow and authorized by her husband to make an adoption during her widowhood.

Section 29, Oudh Estates Act, confers the power of adoption upon every widow of a Muhammadan talukdar and it nowhere lays down that it is necessary for the widow to be in possession for life of the estate of her husband before she can make a valid adoption under the Oudh Estates Act. This does not make the possession of a life-estate by a Hindu widow or a Muhammadan widow the sine qua non or a prerequisite condition before she can validly exercise the authority conferred upon her by her deceased husband.

Ordinarily a life-estate vests in the widow of a Hindu or Muhammadan talukdar who dies intestate, but where a childless talukdar has executed a valid will giving his widow authority to adopt and making his adopted son the absolute owner of the estate the absolute estate vests in the adopted son from the moment he is adopted but enjoyment of it may be postponed or deferred till the termination of the life-estate of the widow.

A testator who is a Muhammadan talukdar can confer on any widow of his the power to adopt without conferring on her also a life-estate; and if the testator by his will lays down that on the adoption being effected the adopted son should come into immediate possession of the estate then the life-estate, if any, of the adopted mother would be cut off at once.

If the testator is authorized by law to make a testamentary disposition of his property he can exercise that right and legally make a will contrary to the devolution of the estate on intestacy laid down in Act I of 1869, provided his will does not offend against the rule of perpetuity incorporated in that Act. By s. 10 of the Oudh Estates Act the entry of the name of a person in the lists is conclusive evidence that he is a talukdar to whom the provisions of the Act apply. The effect of the inclusion of his name in the second list is a statutory declaration that the particular estate by family custom devolves upon a single heir.

Apart from the provisions of s. 32-A, Oudh Estates Act, no incorporation of other property to property held under the Act is possible whether by purchase or accretion.

A Will by the talukdar which does not comply with requirements of Oudh Estates Act is not valid in law. MOHAMMAD SADIQ ALI KHAN v. FAKR JAHAN BEGAM P. C. 385

Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), ss. 4 (1), 52—

Policy of Act—Relinquishment by tenant without surrender of possession—Ejectment of tenant, suit for.

A relinquishment in writing without surrender of possession on the part of a tenant does not constitute a sufficient right in the landlord to recover possession of the plots in question by means of a suit in ejectment.

The policy of the Oudh Rent Act is to keep the relationship of landlord and tenant subsisting in spite of either or both of them and it can be terminated only in the manner provided by the Act.

The combined effect of ss. 4 (1) and 52, Oudh Rent Act, is that an effectual ejectment of a tenant can only take place when the procedure with reference thereto as prescribed by the Act has been adopted and this will be so in spite of any agreement between the landlord and the tenant. Partition Act (IV of 1893), ss. 2, 3, 4, 6, scope of—Operation of s. 4, conditions for—Inherent powers of Court in partition cases.

There is a broad distinction between ss. 2, 3 and 6 of the Partition Act forming a group on the one hand and s. 4 on the other. Section 4 applies to the case of a dwelling house a share of which has been transferred to a stranger and three conditions must be fulfilled before s. 4 comes into operation (1): the suit must relate to a dwelling house of an undivided family, (2) some share in it must have been transferred to the stranger and (3) the stranger transferee must have sued for partition. In the case of the other sections, one of the parties to the dispute may or may not be a stranger. Even if the subject of the dispute is a dwelling house unless there be a stranger transferee s. 4 does not apply.

What s. 3 contemplates is a request by a party for the sale of the whole property. The section favours the smaller share-holder at the expense of the larger and the fact of a person owning a large share is a disability under the section since such a person is precluded from offering to buy the interest of the party owning the smaller share. This is the reason why the Courts have wherever possible striven to avoid this result.

If a sale is directed under s. 2 and s. 3 does not apply, the sale is nevertheless one governed by the Partition Act and s. 6 relates to such a sale.

Independent of Partition Act, a Court has inherent power to refuse to divide a property by metes and bounds and to adopt such other means as may appear equitable for effecting a just partition. SUBBAMMA v. VEERAYYA Mad 203

A patnidar on 3rd June, 1922, brought a suit both against the zemindar and the auction-purchaser for setting aside a sale effected under the Patni Regulation on 15th May, 1922. On 9th June symbolical possession was obtained by the auction-purchaser. In December, 1922, and in April and May, 1923, he paid certain sums of rent to the zemindar. The suit of the patnidar succeeded and the sale was set aside by the first Court. At the time the first Court set aside the sale it provided that the patnidar should recover possession and it directed the zemindar to pay the plaintiff's costs and also to refund the purchase-money to the auction-purchaser with interest, to return him certain security and to bear his costs in the suit. The auction-purchaser as well as the zemindar filed appeals. The auction-purchaser's appeal proceeded on the ground that he should have been refunded the rent which he had paid to the zemindar. The Appellate Court dismissed the appeal but in doing so remarked in its judgment that s. 14 of the Regulation would not be a bar to another suit for the recovery of the rent paid. Thereupon the present suit was brought by the auction-purchaser both against the zemindar and the defaulting patnidar for the refund of the money paid by him as rent:

Held, that the suit against the zemindar was barred. The proper remedy of the auction-purchaser was under s. 14 of the Patni Regulation. It was not intended by the Regulation that the matter should be dealt with piecemeal. The intention was, at all events so far as the claim against the zemindar was concerned, the whole matter should be enquired into and the auction-purchaser should be put in such a position as to suffer no loss.

Held, also, that s. 14, Patni Regulation, does not exclude suits against any party except the zemindar, e. g., against patnidar.

Held, further, that the mere expression by the Appellate Court in the former suit that another suit would lie, could not bind the parties.

Held, still further, that payment of rent by the auction-purchaser to the zemindar could not be regarded as payment under a mistake of fact and could not, therefore, sustain a suit for money paid without consideration. ABDUL HAMID v. BIJJY CHAND Cal. 472

In case of charges of criminal breach of trust against partners, the Court ought to be very careful. In many cases it is impossible to say what the share of the accused may be, whether he is indebted to the firm or whether the firm is indebted to him and if the firm is indebted to him there may be no dishonest intent in his withdrawing money from the firm. Principal and surety—Deed of guarantee—Construction—Debt secured by mortgage—Surety, whether liable only for deficiency after realising mortgage securities—Right to securities.

The material clauses in a deed of guarantee ran as follows—(i) "In consideration of your having at our request agreed to obtain a loan of Rs. 40,00,000 bearing interest at six per cent. per annum from the Imperial Bank of India for the sole benefit of John Carapiet Galstaun for the purpose of satisfying certain decrees and paying certain pressing debts such sum of Rs. 40,00,000 to bear interest at the rate aforesaid and the re-payment thereof to be secured by a mortgage to be executed by the said John Carapiet Galstaun in your favour of the properties We hereby guarantee to you the payment by the said John Carapiet Galstaun of the said sum of Rs. 40,00,000 to the limit of our aggregate and individual liability hereinafter prescribed;

(ii) this guarantee shall be a continuing guarantee, but our aggregate liability thereunder shall not under any circumstances exceed the sum of Rs. 18,00,000 and the liability of each of us individually in respect of the said sum shall not exceed the sum of Rs. 6,00,000;

(iii) within the aforesaid limit of liability this guarantee shall extend to and be applicable to the whole debt that shall ultimately be due to you from the said John Carapiet Galstaun in respect of such advance as aforesaid and not merely to so much thereof as shall be co-extensive with our aforesaid maximum liability hereunder.

The High Court held that upon its true construction the guarantee only provided for a guarantee of the balance which should remain owing after the creditor had exhausted his remedies under the mortgage against the principal debtor. On appeal:

Held, (i) that the guarantee covered the whole debt of 40 lakhs to the limit of the aggregate and individual liability of the guarantors and not merely the deficiency remaining after realising the mortgage securities;

(ii) that cl. (iii) was a clause commonly employed in the case of a limited guarantee to enable the creditor at any rate up to a point to retain as against the guarantor dividends received in the bankruptcy of the principal debtor and it did not cut down but re-inforced the obligation imposed by cl. (i);

(iii) that this construction of the guarantee was not in any way affected by the practice of the Courts in India under O. XXXIV, Civil Procedure Code, in relation to suits to enforce a mortgage.

Their Lordships further disapproved of the view that the sureties would not be entitled to the benefit of the securities until the whole of the 40 lakhs had been discharged. ALFRED ERNEST v. OABE LAZARUS

Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), ss. 4, 12, 59, 90—Title of executor, whether vests before grant of probate—Sale by executor before getting probate, validity of.

Under the Probate and Administration Act, 1881, the estate of a testator vests in the executor and the executor has the power to dispose of the estate from the date of the testator's death, even though probate has not been obtained.

Under the English Law the title of an executor is derived from the Will and not from the probate though it is probate alone which authenticates his right, and the Indian Legislature has not departed from this principle in the Probate and Administration Act, 1881.

Section 12, Probate and Administration Act, does not imply that before probate the executor has no title but is only intended to simplify the proof of his title as dating from the testator's death by authenticating the Will against all the world. KADHYALA VENKATA SUBRAMA v. KATREDDI RAMAYYA

The question whether a Receiver in insolvency is or is not a representative of the debtor for the purposes of s. 47, Civil Procedure Code, depends upon the purpose and nature of the application made by the Receiver. For some purposes he would be entitled as representing the judgment-debtor to litigate matters under s. 47 of the Code; but where he comes to the executing Court for the purpose of saying that as the judgment-debtor’s property now belongs to the Receiver the Court cannot sell for the judgment-debtor’s debt that which is the property of another person because it has vested in the Receiver for the benefit of the creditors, then, for that purpose, the Receiver is not a representative of the judgment-debtor, but a third party making a claim, and no second appeal lies from an order made on such an application.

The failure of the Court to frame rules as required by s. 79, Provincial Insolvency Act, cannot override the provision of the law which exempts an insolvent from liability for his debts prior to the date of his insolvency on his obtaining a discharge. While a small cause suit was pending before a Munsif who had small cause powers he was transferred and succeeded by a gentleman who was not invested with the powers of a Judge, Small Cause Court, at the date. The Additional District Judge thereupon made the following order: "The Small Cause Court cases pending in the Court of the Munsif of Basti will be tried by the present incumbent of the office as regular suits, as he has not got the Small Cause Court powers. The attention of the said learned Munsif be drawn to s. 35, Small Cause Courts Act, and these cases should be dealt with as provided by the Small Cause Courts Act." In pursuance of this order or direction, the successor took cognizance of the case and tried it as a regular suit. He decreed the claim of the plaintiffs, and the defendant filed an appeal which was rejected on the ground that no appeal lay.

Held, (i) that the order of the Additional District Judge was not an order of transfer within the meaning of s. 24, Civil Procedure Code, but was merely drawing the attention of the Munsif to the fact that there was a provision in the Small Cause Courts Act in s. 35 to the effect that the successor of the Judge, Small Cause Court, should try the suit;

(ii) that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to try the case under s. 35 and his decree was appealable.

Held, further, when an officer who has no Small Cause Court jurisdiction hears a case which was pending before his predecessor-in-office who had Small Cause Court jurisdiction, and makes a decree, the decree is appealable.

Per Sulaiman, Actg. C. J.—Section 24 contemplates the transfer of a case from one existing Court to another existing Court. If, therefore, a Court of Small Causes has ceased to exist or the officer invested with Small Cause Court powers has been transferred from the district and there is no other officer possessing such powers, there would be no Court from which the District Court can under s. 24, transfer the case to an ordinary Civil Court. The contingency where no Court or officer invested with Small Cause Court powers exists is provided for in s. 35, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act.

Section 35, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, is subject to the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, and would not be applicable where there is any special provision in the Code. Prima facie s. 35 deals with a case where either a Court of Small Causes or a Court invested with such jurisdiction has ceased to have such jurisdiction and under this section if the Court of Small Causes has ceased to exist or the officer invested with such powers has been transferred, then the proceedings would be bad in the new Court which would have jurisdiction to try the suit if it were filed on that date afresh. Accordingly if there is in the district any other Court or officer invested with power to try the Small Cause Court suits in that area, it is that Court or officer who would have jurisdiction to take cognizance of the suit and continue the proceeding. In such a case the successor of the officer recently transferred who himself does not possess the powers of a Small Cause Court, would not be entitled under s. 35, to take it up suo motu and can only act if the case were transferred to him under s. 24. On the other hand if no such Court or officer remains in the district then the suit if filed would have to be filed in the ordinary civil Court and the proceeding accordingly would be cognizable by such Court.

Where a Munsif has been transferred and there is in the district a Subordinate Judge invested with the powers of a Small Cause Court for the area within the jurisdiction of the Munsif under s. 35, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, it would be such a Subordinate Judge who would have authority to entertain the proceeding. A new Munsif who comes to take the place of the Munsif transferred but who does not possess the Small Cause Court powers would have no jurisdiction himself to transfer the case from the Small Cause Court side of his predecessor to his own regular side. The case would go automatically to the Subordinate Judge who is invested with Small Cause Court powers. If there is such a Subordinate Judge, it would be open to the District Judge to transfer the case from the Court of the Subordinate Judge with Small Cause Court powers to that of the new Munsif without such powers. If there is no such Subordinate Judge with Small Cause Court powers the Munsif will under s. 35, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, have to try it on the original side, and the District Judge would have no power at all to act under s. 24 so as to transfer the case to the new Munsif and make him a Court of Small Causes. He can, of course, transfer the case from the Munsif's file to any other Court, but the suit would cease to be a Small Cause Court suit. An appeal in such cases would lie to the District Judge. BHAGWATI PANDH V. BADRI PANDH All. 357

Section 11, Civil Procedure Code, does not in terms apply to execution proceedings as they are not proceedings in a separate suit. The principle underlying that section has no doubt been applied to execution proceedings, but the principle of constructive res judicata has not been applied unless the point was expressly raised and decided or must be deemed to have been decided by necessary implication. SHEO TAHAL RAM v. BINAIR SHUKUL All. 353

Execution proceedings—Sale by judgment-debtor during execution proceedings—Decision in execution as to validity of attachment etc., whether binding on purchaser—Purchaser claiming title under judgment-debtor—Lis pendens, doctrine of.

Orders passed in the course of execution proceedings adjudicating on the rights of the parties are res judicata and cannot be called in question by the parties or their representatives. When once the said orders become final, that effect cannot be sought to be avoided by making allegations that the previous decisions were wrong on the merits because full facts were not placed before the Court or that all available evidence was not let in on the former occasion.

When proceedings by way of attachment of immoveable property in execution of a money decree have been taken by the executing Court in an execution application filed by the decree-holder, any question that might be raised whether the proceedings taken by the Court did amount to a valid attachment or not is one that falls to be decided by the Court in the execution department; any stranger purchasing the property from the judgment-debtor in those circumstances would only take the property subject to the Court's decision as to the effect of the proceedings actually taken before his purchase. Such purchaser would be bound by the Court's decision of the question in the execution department as a person claiming title under the judgment-debtor.

Res judicata—conclid.

The principle of lis pendens would also apply to such sale. It is not open to a party to a proceeding to nullify the effect of the proceedings already properly taken with reference to that property by transferring the same to strangers. It does not really matter whether the actual decision of the Court as to the effect of past proceedings is given only after the purchase by the stranger, if the adjudication is really with reference to matters that happened before such purchase and regarding the effect of the legal proceedings that were taken prior to the same. To safeguard the purchasers' rights the purchasers should in such circumstances get themselves impleaded as parties. VENKATACHALAPATHI RAO v. VENKATAPPAYYA Mad. 306

s. 16 (2), (3)—Nature of institution—Burden of proof—Udasi, institution—Worship of samadh—Inference from circumstances—Udasis, whether 'Sikhs'

An institution was founded in the time of Moguls by one Guria, and ever since its foundation all the mahants were Udasis, succession going from guru to chela, subject to confirmation by Udasi Bhik. The principal object of worship was the samadh of Guria, which existed on the date of dispute:

Held, (1) that the onus of proving that Guria was a Sikh and that the institution had been established for use by Sikhs for the purpose of public worship and that it had been used for such worship by Sikhs, and fell within s. 16 (2) (3), Punjab Sikh Gurdwaras Act, was on those claiming it to be a Sikh Gurdwara;

(2) that the institution must be regarded as having been founded by Udasis and must be treated as an Udasi Gurdwara; and

(3) the mere fact that Adi Grantha was also kept in the institution and on occasions opened with due ceremony and passages from it read was not sufficient proof of the purely Sikh nature of the worship carried on at the Gurdwara or Dera.

In a suit for specific performance the plaintiff has to allege and if the fact is traversed, to prove, a continuous readiness and willingness from the date of the contract to the time of the hearing, to perform the contract on his part.

Where the plaintiff sued for specific performance alleging that a khancha was included in the property which the defendants had agreed to sell and claiming damages in case the khancha could not be included and it was found that the defendants had not promised to sell the khancha:

Held, as the plaintiff was not ready and willing to perform his part of a contract as it really was but insisted on having the khancha included in the sale, he had debarred himself from obtaining specific performance. NARINJAN v. MUHAMMAD YUNUS Lah. 557

Held, that it could not be deemed that there was a concluded contract, whereby the co-sharer undertook a binding obligation on behalf of himself and the other co-sharer to obtain the lease of the property and no suit for specific performance to execute a kabuliyat and give possession can lie against the entire body of the proprietors.

Held, further, that even assuming that there was a concluded contract, specific performance of the agreement in part could not be decreed under s. 15, Specific Relief Act, as the plaintiff had not relinquished all claim to further performance and all right to compensation either for the deficiency or for the loss or damage sustained by him through the default of the defendants. *PROMATHA NATH v. Surety—Stay of execution of mortgage-decree—Bond by surety—Construction—Suit to enforce bond—Limitation—Cause of action, whether arises from date of appellate decree or sale of property in execution—Practice—New point in appeal.

During the pendency of an appeal from a decree for sale to enforce a mortgage the Appellate Court ordered stay of execution of the decree for a period of one year on the appellant furnishing security for Rs. 1,12,000 and, if the appeal was not decided within one year, for a further period of one year for a similar sum of Rs. 1,12,000. In pursuance of this order a person stood surety and executed a bond which provided as follows: "I of my own free will stand security to the extent of rupees seventy-seven thousand out of rupees one lac and twelve thousand as therein ordered and covenant that if the decree of the first Court be confirmed or varied by the Appellate Court within one year from the 1st April, 1919, the said defendants shall duly act in accordance with the decree of the said Appellate Court and they shall pay the sum of rupees seventy-seven thousand or whatever may be payable under the said High Court order not exceeding rupees seventy-seven thousand, but if they should fail to pay the sum of rupees seventy-seven thousand, then any amount so payable as aforesaid shall be realised from my person and my legal representatives shall be personally liable to pay the same. If the judgment-debtors fail to furnish security to the extent of rupees one lakh and twelve thousand on the 1st April, 1920, in case the appeals be not decided within that date then the decree-holders according to the order of the High Court shall be able to execute their decree with interest and shall be able to realise rupees seventy-seven thousand from me and my representatives the money secured by this bond." The appeal was heard on the 19th July 1921 and dismissed. On 26th January 1925 the property was sold and there was a deficit of Rs. 93,000. The decree was confirmed on appeal on 16th December 1925 and on the 25th January 1927 the decree-holders made an application to enforce the bond against the surety. The High Court held that the sum of Rs. 77,000 had become payable on the 1st April 1920 and that the claim was time barred:

Held, (1) that the security bond did not put upon the giver of the bond an obligation to make an immediate payment in cash but only gave the decree-holders a realisable security up to Rs. 77,000 for the balance of the sum, if any, remaining unpaid after the mortgaged property had been realised;

(2) that until the property was sold the liability of the surety could not be enforced, and the application made in January 1927 was within time inasmuch as under the Limitation Act it must either be within three years if the application was properly an application in the suit, or within six years if the application should have been made by independent suit:

Held, further, that it was not open to the defendants to take the plea that the application should have been made by an independent suit, having regard to the fact that the point had never been taken before, and that if it was allowed to be taken in appeal and succeeded the appellants would be barred by lapse of time, although their original application was in time.

A security bond must be construed in the light of the order directing the security to be given. RAGHUNANDAN PRASAD SINGH v. KIRTYANAND SINGH P. C. 629

The 'active prosecution' within the meaning of s. 52, Transfer of Property Act, must be deemed to continue so long as the suit is pending in appeal since the proceedings in the Appellate Court are merely a continuation of those in the suit.

In a mortgage suit the lis continues even after the final decree and subsists during the pendency of proceedings in execution.

The mere fact that a judgment has been obtained on a mortgage does not extinguish the debt and the mortgage continues as a lien till it is satisfied or the judgment is barred by the statute of limitation.

In cases where no question of insolvency is involved a debtor may pay one creditor in full and may leave others unpaid. The transfer which defeats or delays creditors is not an instrument which prefers one creditor to another but an instrument which removes property from the creditors to the benefit of the debtor.

A transfer by a debtor in favour of one of the creditors for adequate consideration in satisfaction of genuine debts and without reservation of any benefit to the debtor is not hit by the provisions of s. 53, Transfer of Property Act. UTTAMRAO v. GANGARAM Rang. 237

Where properties A, B and C are all made security for one mortgage, if property A is subject to a prior encumbrance jointly with properties X, Y and Z, the rateable share to be attributed to A under the prior incumbrance must necessarily be assessed in order to ascertain its value for the purposes of the mortgage. It is not correct to say that all that would be necessary in such a case would be to see what was the total amount of prior incumbrance to which A was liable, irrespective of the question whether that liability was to be shared by X, Y and Z.

Where a large quantity of cocaine in a number of tin boxes placed in a row is found in a courtyard close to a house and the accused are found to be near the place from where the cocaine is recovered and they do not explain how they came to be there and how the cocaine happened to be found placed in a row

Where a person occupying a fiduciary position obtains a conveyance of immoveable property by undue influence and fraud if there is no proof of undue delay on the part of the vendor in bringing a suit to set aside the deed and there is no difficulty of putting the parties back in the position which they occupied, the vendor should have an account of the rents and profits of the properties from the date on which possession was obtained by the vendee, the latter being entitled to credit in the account for all payments made by him to the vendor. Interest should also be allowed at the usual rate on both sides of the account.

In such a case though before the institution of the suit the defendant could have made a valid transfer to an innocent purchaser, it by no means follows from this that as between him and the person he had defrauded his possession was not wrongful. To admit of such an assertion would be to allow him

The words 'when a contract becomes void' in s. 65, Contract Act, are sufficient to cover the case of a voidable contract which has been avoided and the said section will apply to such a case.

Will—Construction—Charitable trust—Gifts in alternative—Previous gifts invalid but residuary gift valid—Effect—Persons entitled to manage or apply to Court to enforce trust—Death of trustees—Power of sole surviving trustee to appoint by Will.

Generally speaking, if a trust is of a charitable or public nature, the Advocate-General or the Collector is the only person who can apply to the Court to enforce the trust. In the case of a private trust it is the beneficiary interested who can apply. Where a Will provides for the funeral of the testator or the disposal of his body in the performance of which no person has any direct interest, no one can insist on these provisions being carried out. Even the nearest relative of the testator has in that capacity no locus standi to apply to the Court to enforce the provisions of the Will in which no one is directly interested.

Where a Will provides that if one of the trustees dies, the others may appoint any one in his place and no such appointments are made with the result that only one trustee is left behind, it is not open to such trustee to appoint new trustees by his Will either in his own place or in place of others for the simple reason that by the time the Will operates he ceases to be a trustee.

Where there are no trustees left, the heirs of the testator are the proper persons to manage the trust.

A testator provided in his Will that the residue of his property should be spent in distributing brass vessels or in giving dinner to Brahmans in Shukaltirth or in providing water wells wherever there be scarcity of water and the surplus, if any should be utilised in the Sadavarta of Shukaltirth. The objection directed against the Will was that the first two objects not being charitable the Will failed entirely:

Held, that the ultimate gift to Sadavarta of Shukaltirth was by itself a good residuary gift, and even if any of the previous gifts failed, the result was that the property in respect of which the gift failed fell into the residue and passed to the Sadavarta. KALIDAS v. RUKSHAMANI Bom. 168
